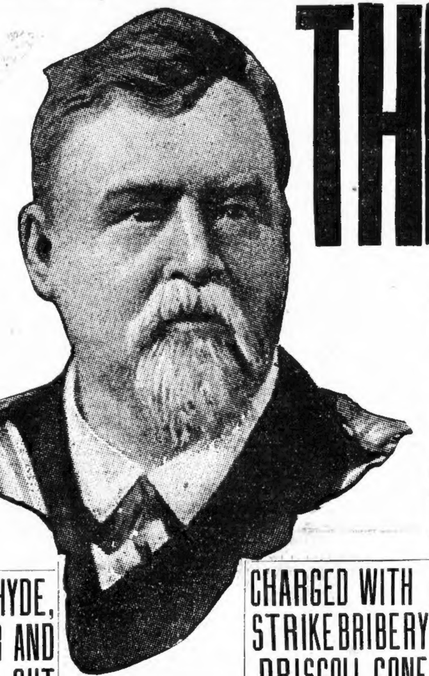
RUSSIANS, BY ORDER OF COMMANDER, SURVIVORS SAY, THREW WOUNDED OVERBOARD



Admiral Volkersam Slain by First Shell Fired at His Ship, the Osliabia. The Vessel Was Later Sunk by Torpedoes.

Deck of Battleship Orel Like a Shambles, and Men in Panic From Cries of Injured—140 Hurled Into Ocean and Drowned by Own Comrades.

TOKIO, June 2.—Fearing that the shrieks and groans of the wounded and dying would dishearten his men in the midst of the great battle of the Sea of Japan, the captain of the Russian battleship Orel, later captured by the Japanese, ordered his wounded thrown overboard, according to stories of survivors now in the hospitals here. One hundred and forty of his men thus met death in the water.

Within a few minutes after the great battle started, say these men, the deck of the Orel was like a shambles. Some 300 men had been wounded, half of them mortally, by the rain of Japanese shells.

Threw Wounded Overboard.

The wounded impeded the work of the remaining members of the crew, and the order was given to throw them overboard. Only those slightly wounded were allowed to remain on the vessel, and they were lashed to the masts to prevent their interference with the fighting.

With decks thus cleared of the first fruit of the awful rain of fire from the oncoming and persistent Japanese ships, the crew of the Orel fought with desperate bravery. For hours this fight went on, the great guns tearing the vitals of the big ship by each successive shock. The Japanese rain of shells was continuous.

Officers Drove Men to Quarters.

Officers of the Orel rushed back and forth along the decks compelling men to remain at the guns by threats and urging. All that day and part of the next the Orel fought on, before she surrendered. Her crew had by this time been practically annihilated.

There is a plan now to bring the captured battleship to Yokosuka, where the Mikado will visit it. The hull of the great craft is ripped up by the heavy shell fire and many of her guns are smashed and dismounted. Those of her crew alive when the vessel capitulated are now in the hands of the Japanese as prisoners of war.

TO FORCE HYDE, ALEXANDER AND TARBELL OUT

Probable Motion to Be Made at Directors' Meeting in New York To-day.

Special to the Boston American.

NEW YORK, June 2.—A motion that President James W. Alexander, Vice President James H. Hyde, and Second Vice President Gage E. Tarbell of the Equitable Life Assurance Society be called upon to resign is believed to be inevitable when the repirt of the Frick investigating committee comes up at the directors' meeting to-day.

All three will go to the meeting prepared to make a desperate fight. Their friends say the report is a move in a gigantic plot to give to the Standard Oil Trust the control of the Equitable funds, which amount to nearly half a billion. Although such bitter enemies, Alexander and Hyde may be forced to be allies in defence.

Astounding Charges Made.

The Frick report does not demand their retirement in set terms, but its arraignment is so scathing, and the censure so strong, that an attempt to turn Alexander, Hyde and Tarbell out of office appears certain. They will fight the adoption of the report. It will not be as radical a statement as the one prepared to be read to directors. That document provoked such a cyclone that the Frick committee decided, it is said, to tone it down. It almost caused a fist fight between Tarbell and Frick, sent Alexander from the Equitable building with his face flushed, and drove Hyde scurrying in the utmost agitation to the office of his counsel.

The scope and extent of the charges embodied in the committee's finding have astounded directors. There is talk in financial circles that strenuous efforts will be made to hush up the matter and withhold from publication the original report "for the good of society." The greatest financiers in the world, policyholders and the public are watching the situation with keener interest than ever before. In Wall street it is believed that the crisis in the great battle is nigh. A friend of Alexander said:

Standard Oil After Control.

"It is the gravest crisis in the history of the Equitable Society. The plan is to put it under the control of the Harriman, Schiff, Stillman, the Rockefellers and the Standard Oil crowd. Hyde was promised by Harriman that no drastic report would be made against him and other members of the committee. Now Harriman, Frick and Ingalls bring in a report ignoring grave charges and exaggerating trivial ones for the purpose of controlling the funds of the society.

"The plan has been to take advantage of the controversy in the Equitable and eliminate James W. Alexander, the man who first drew the attention of the board and the public to the threatened Wall Street

WHITTIER IN COURT, FACES DEATH CHARGE

Lynn Man on Trial at Salem for Killing His Divorced Wife.

Special to the Boston American.

SALEM, June 2.—Seth K. Whittier, charged with manslaughter because of the death on March 16 of his divorced wife, Mrs. Susan A. Fuller, showed no agitation to-day when brought before Judge William Burnham Stevens in the Essex County Superior Criminal Court to be arraigned for trial. His face showed prison pallor because of long confinement, but he looked upon his counsel, Attorney Peter Breen, with confidence.

Another case was being heard when Deputy Sheriff Arthur Bishop escorted him into the room where a jury is to hear the evidence upon the grave indictment. Whittier took a seat and calmly awited his turn at the bar of justice.

Mrs. Fuller kept a lodging house at No. 30 Ireson street, Lynn. Her maiden name was Woods and she was one of the most beautiful girls in Auburn, Me., when she met Whittier. They were married in 1878. They were happy until he began to drink. He was working in a Haverhill shoe factory when she left him, and got a divorce fourteen years ago. In 1895 she married Jerome S. Fuller, and he died three years afterwards.

When Whittier heard that she was a widow, he came to Lynn and boarded with her. Lodgers say that Whittier and his former wife were much in each other's company and drank a great deal. When she was found dead in her home with wounds on head and body, Whittier was arrested. The Lynn police believed that the couple may have quarrelled over rent money he had collected.

FIND GRAFT IN BRITISH ARMY

LONDON, June 2.—The report of a war office committee on the improper disposal of military stores at the conclusion of the South African war reveals a huge scandal. Officers whose names are given are said to have bought stores at absurdly low prices and afterward resold them to the military authorities at enormous profits, entailing a loss to the Government of $5,000,000.

CHARGED WITH STRIKE BRIBERY DRISCOLL GONE

Man Who Is Sent to Represent Chicago Employers Can't Be Found.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

CHICAGO, June 2.—Efforts are being made by the State's Attorney's office to-day to track John C. Driscoll, accused by President Shea and Albert Young of the Teamsters' Union of being the representative of a coterie of employers in secret strike settlements.

A subpoena has been issued to have Driscoll appear before the Grand Jury and explain the allegation of wholesale attempts at bribery of labor leaders by employers to destroy the business of competitors.

Driscoll is reported to be a fugitive as a result of the charge that he was used as a go-between by R. J. Thorne of Montgomery, Ward & Co., in offering Shea $10,000 cash to cause a strike of thirty days duration in the establishment of Sears, Roebuck & Co.

Penalty is Heavy.

At the time the bribe is alleged to have been made Thorne was president of the Chicago arbitration board and also president of the Associated Teaming Interests. The crime charged, involving as it does, some of the foremost employers, constitutes conspiracy to do an illegal act, which is punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary for five years and a fine of $20,000.

Driscoll left Chicago last week, according to the statements of his wife. At her home Mrs. Driscoll said she was in ignorance of the whereabouts of her husband.

"I don't know where he is, and if I did I would not tell," she said. "I don't know when he will come back."

RAILWAY MAIL CLERK INDICTED

Frank O. Pierce of Somerville, a former railway mail clerk on a New York-Boston night run, was indicted on a charge of embezzling a letter from the mails last April by the grand jury of the United States Circuit Court which reported to Judge Lowell to-day. Pierce's case attracted much attention at the time, his wife collapsing when he was arrested at his home.

A "no bill" was returned in the case of Postmaster Charles A. Gifford of Westport, who had been charged with embezzling from the postoffice funds.

BODY OF J. M. SEARS TO BE CREMATED MONDAY

REMAINS WILL BE TAKEN TO MT. AUBURN, WHERE SERVICES WILL BE HELD.

The funeral of J. Montgomery Sears, for many years Boston's wealthiest citizen and taxpayer, who died this morning at his Summer home in Southboro, will take place on Monday at the mortuary chapel, Mt. Auburn Cemetery. Bishop Lawrence will conduct the services and only members of the immediate family and relatives will attend.

Immediately afterward the body will be taken to the crematory and there disposed of in accordance with the often-expressed wishes of the deceased.

There will be no honorary pallbearers at the funeral, and the casket will be borne by old servants of the family. No services will be held at the house in Southboro. The funeral will be under the direction of Undertaker W. H. Smith of Framingham.

Private Car to Boston.

The body will be brought to Boston in a private car on one of the regular morning trains. From the Back Bay station, without stopping at the Newbury street house, the funeral will proceed to Mt. Auburn. The only opportunity for friends to bid a last farewell will be afforded at the Southboro residence.

According to the statements of J. Montgomery Sears, Jr., to-day, his father refused to the very end to believe that he was going to die. Within a few days he had discussed plans for a new yacht, and talked of his intentions when he recovered, as he hoped to do despite the ultimatum of attending physicians that he could not live.

When the end came his family was by the bedside. Shortly after 2 o'clock Mr. Sears's condition took a change for the worse and Mrs. Sears, J. Montgomery Sears, Jr., and Miss Helen Sears were summoned. They had known for several days that there was no hope of the great financier's recovery from the illness that had confined him to his bed for several weeks and were prepared for the end.

J. Montgomery Sears was born on Christmas Day, 1854. He was descended from the Cape Cod branch of the Sears family, which for generations had been engaged in seafaring and farming. His father, Joshua Sears, was the first member of the family to accumulate a fortune, and, as his son was an only child, he inherited the major portion of the estate. It amounted at the time of Joshua Sears's death to about $1,600,000.

Left an orphan at the age of three years, he was cared for by his second cousin, Mary Jane Myrick, in Yarmouth, until he was five years old. Then he was brought to Boston by Alpheus Hardy, his guardian and one of the trustees of his fortune, with whom he made his home until he attained the age of manhood.

By careful management Mr. Hardy augmented the fortune of the young man so that at the time he came into full possession of the estate it amounted to nearly $5,000,000. Mr. Hardy considered the boy as one of his own sons, and sent him to Phillips Academy, Andover, where several

FRAUD ORDER ON MEDICAL MEN

Postoffice Ordered to Return Mail Addressed to Several Boston Concerns.

Postmaster Hibbard to-day received fraud orders preventing the delivery of mail to the Dr. Herrick Medical Company, No. 37 Tremont street; Dr. Joseph Grady, No. 238 Tremont street; Dr. Collins and the Berwick Institute, No. 11 Berwick park; and Dr. Williams, formerly of Boston, who now has offices in New York, Chicago and Ohio.

The orders are issued by Postmaster General Cortelyou, on the grounds that the concerns are conducting a fraudulent business in professing to cure certain diseases. All mail addressed to these concerns will be returned to the senders stamped "Fraudulent." Under the orders issued the firms cannot even receive money orders in payment for treatment accorded prior to the issuance of the order.

Charles H. Innes, represents some of the concerns. He said: "In all probability an appeal will be made against the Postmaster-General's order, and an injuction restraining the enforcement of the order will be asked."

All of the firms included in the fraud order have done a big business for years. They have advertised extensively.

HELD IN $100 FOR ASSAULT WITH AXE

SOUTH PARIS, Me., June 2.—Amos A. Buck, charged with assaulting his wife with an axe with intent to kill her, at her mother's home at Paris Hill, has been held in $100 to appear before the Grand Jury of the Supreme Court in October.

FARMERS FLEE MILITIA'S FIRE

Rhode Island Marksmen Place Massachusetts Borderers' Lives in Peril.

NORTH ATTLEBOR, June 2.—The erratic shooting of the Rhode Island militia has caused farmers along the Massachusetts-Rhode Island line to abandon their farms, and has put the lives of everyone who lives within two miles of the Rhode Island rifle range in danger.

Bullets from the poorly pointed guns of the Rhode Islanders sail from Seekonk rifle range into Massachusetts with altogether too much velocity and frequency, and a few days ago Walter . Whipple and Fred Gerald, whose farms border the Rhode Island line, have been compelled to give up farming and move their household effects, fearing that the bullets from Rhode Island will put to an end their earthly existence.

The Rhode Island range is in the town of Seekonk, less than a mile from the Massachusetts line. The pits point in such a direction that the bullets that do not strike the thirty-foot butts fly half a mile or more into Massachusetts, and land in the very dooryards of some of the farm houses.

Farmers along the State line have secured counsel and will shortly make an appeal to Adjutant General Frederic M. Sackett of Rhode Island, and Adjutant General Stopford of Massachusetts, asking that something be done to protect their lives and property.

RUSSIANS HANGED BY THE HUNDRED

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, June 2.—Twenty-five Russian army officers and 300 privates were recently executed in Manchuria by order of General Linevitch, the Russian commander-in-chief.

The officers were shot and the privates were hanged, according to special dispatches received here. This wholesale execution, without precedent in history, was the outgrowth of disloyalty and conspiracy among the Czar's troops, say the dispatches.

Against the officers, who ranked from the lowest to the grade of colonel, the charge was that of distributing proclamations urging the troops to rebellion against Russia.

It is believed here that the execution immediately followed the news of the Russian disaster at sea. At that time special dispatches stated that the troops had heard of the great triumph of the Japanese fleet and were practically in a state of rebellion.

General Linevitch at that time wired to the Czar, stating that in the temper of the troops at that time it would be impossible for him to continue the fight against the victorious Oyama. The Czar placed the matter before a council of his ministers at Tsarkoe-Selo, and an order to enforce discipline at any cost was wired to General Linevitch.

Now it seems probable that, acting on this order, and with the ultimate purpose of frightening rebellious troops into submission, General Linevitch took immediate action against officers and privates alike.

Usually in such cases officers and men, regarded as traitors, are all hanged regardless of their rank. In this case, however, it seems, the officers were shot. News of the execution has reached St. Petersburg and far from having a quieting effect there, is acting to the contrary.

DISLOYALTY IN THE RANKS.

For months disloyalty in the ranks, both in Manchuria and among the reserves in Russia, has been a source of great anxiety to Russian officials. They have known

JAPANESE OFFICER TELLS HOW FOE WAS CAUGHT IN CIRCLE OF FIRE

Wonderful Manoeuvres of Mikado's Fleet in Laying Trap for Russians.

TOKIO, June 2.—A Japanese officer who was in the battle of the Sea of Japan and has returned to Sasebo gives the following account of the fight:

"At 5:30 Saturday morning a wireless message reading: 'The enemy's squadron is in sight,' reached the naval base. This message was transmitted to all our ships by the flagship, with instructions to get ready for action. Our squadron left their rendezvous and headed for the eastern channel off Tsushima. Our men seemed to be filled with new inspiration and were eager for the long-delayed fight to begin.

"When Tsushima was sighted to the southwest the sea was rough, and the torpedo boats were forced to run for the shelter of the island. Our third fighting squadron in the Takashihobto port reconnoitered the Russian course and at 11:30 a. m. informed the main squadron by wireless telegraph the Russian ships were passing into the east channel, whereupon our main squadron, changing its course somewhat to the southward, came in sight of Okinshima at 1 o'clock in the afternoon.

First Manoeuvre of Battle.

"The third division arrived later and joined the main squadron. The first and second divisions, accompanied by the destroyer flotilla, changed to a westerly course, while the third division and fourth destoyer flotilla headed slightly eastward. During the manoeuvre the Russian flagship appeared to the southward at 1:45 o'clock. The Russians steamed up in double column.

"The fleet was numerous, but no living being was visible. The Russian ships seemed to be in good order. Our ships hoisted the flag of action, the Mikasa signalling:

"'The destiny of our Empire depends upon this action. You are all expected to do your utmost.'

"Our men seemed to silently weigh the significance of this signal."

"Our first and second divisions turned to the Russians' starboard, while the third division kept in close touch with the preceding two divisions. With the Japanese ships proceeding in this order it was 2:13 o'clock when the Russians opened fire.

Borodino Catches Fire.

"We so manoeuvred our ships as to have their bows parallel to the north side of the Russian line. The Mikasa of our first division, which had been leading, changed to the rear of the line, while the Kasagua headed the line. The engagement now became very fierce. The Borodino was seen to be on fire. A little later the Russians headed west and we changed our course accordingly. Five ships of our second division concentrated their fire on the Borodino. Our first division now began firing vigorously, proceeding parallel with the Russian line, and as we began to press against the head of the Russian line our third division veered to the Russian rear, thus enveloping their ships.

"The engagement proceeded hotly. Our second division followed a course parallel with the northern side of the Russians, and this movement completed the envelopment. The Russian ships were seen trying to break through and our destroyer flotilla intercepted their new course. This state of envelopment continued until the following day, with the ships at varying distances.

Inclosed in Circle of Fire.

"Thus inclosed on all sides, the Russians were helpless and powerless to escape the circle. Previous instructions had been given the destroyers and torpedo boats to attack the Russian ships. Following instructions the fifth destroyer flotilla advanced against a Russian ship, upon which the second division had been concentrating its fire, signalling, 'We are going to give the last thrust at them.'

"The Russian ship continued to fight, and seeing the approaching torpedo boats directed its fire on them. Undaunted, our destroyers pressed forward, the Chitose meantime continuing its fire. The torpedo flotilla arrived within 200 metres of the Russian ship and the Shiranus fired the first shot. Two other torpedo boats fired one each. The Shiranus received two shells, but the other boats were not damaged. The Russian ship was completely sunk.

Confusion Among Russians.

"Sundown saw the battle raging furiously. Our shells were evidently telling on the Russians, who showed signs of confusion. Our fifth torpedo flotilla, after destroying the Borodino, followed in the wake of our second division, the signal reading 'Something like the Russians' submarines have been sighted. Attack them.'

"The flotilla followed and located the object, which proved to be a sinking ship with its overturned bottom showing. Thirty survivors clung to the wreck, crying for assistance. Firing ceased with the approach of darkness.

"According to orders previously givenfor a torpedo attack after dark, all the destroyer flotilla, dividing into two squadrons, proceeded to attack the Russians during the whole night.

Surrounded During Night.

"During the night the Russians continued to move, and we preserved our enveloping movement some distance from the Russian position.

"The Russian ships headed northeast after daybreak, hoping to reach Vladivostok. Our officers and men were determined that not a ship would escape and resolved not to relax their efforts until they had succeeded in either sinking or capturing every Russian ship.

"Our ships always kept ahead of the Russians. The battle was resumed at 9 o'clock Sunday morning, twelve miles east of Chiyupyon Bay, and lasted all day. Here the Russians suffered their heaviest losses. They seemed unprepared to repel night attacks. During our first night attack the Russians showed nine searchlights and frustrated the attacks, but clearly gave us the location of the fleet, which brought success later."

BORODINO'S DECKS COVERED WITH DEAD

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, June 2.—From an officer of the Russian battleship Borodino, the Daily Express correspondent at Sasebo, Japan, has received a stirring account of his experiences in the great fight. The officer, now a prisoner, says:

"Our ship went into action as soon as the Japanese were within range. I was in the forward barbette, in charge of one of the twelve-inch guns, when the signal 'Begin firing!' was given from the flagship Kniaz Souvaroff.

"The Japanese ship nearest us was the Shikishima (battleship), whose projectiles began to reach us within a few moments. I fired my first gun at 1:30 o'clock, and was overjoyed to see it reach its mark, for a Japanese vessel was struck in her upper works and did not return our fire for at least ten minutes.

"At this early stage of the battle Admiral Rojestvensky came on board the Borodino and directed the fighting from her flying bridge.

RAIN OF PROJECTILES.

"At 3 o'clock the Shikishima, in company with the Fugi, opened fire upon us with every gun bearing. Almost immediately afterward a projectile struck my barbette and every one of us inside it became insensible. The barbette filled with smoke, and I groped my way out, only to find projectiles fairly raining on the decks and dozens of men lying dead or wounded at every turn.

"When the barbette was clear of smoke I re-entered it with the crew, but we had fired only two more rounds when the projectiles, one from each of our enemies, struck us simultaneously and disabled both twelve-inch guns, wrecking the barbette and killing eighteen officers and men.

SHIP A PERFECT SHAMBLES.

"I crawled on all fours to the deck and found my way to one of the six-inch guns, which was surrounded by dead or wounded men. Here I remained an hour, during which time the Borodino became a perfect shambles, the ward room and steerage being crowded with wounded. Nearly every ammunition hoist on board had been wrecked so that shells had to be passed up by hand.

"It was now four o'clock, and the Borodino was down by the head, for she had been hulled several times, and there was no hope of saving her.

"The Japanese ships, having succeeded in breaking our battle formation, came closer, and brought every available gun to bear on us. Our fighting tops were their particular target, and apparently not one of the men who had been stationed in them was alive.

"I volunteered to go up with a few men, and the sight there was so terrible that it has haunted me and robbed me of sleep ever since. The men in the tops had been literally hacked to pieces by the accurate fire of the Japanese, and the machine guns were hopelessly ruined.

FIRE BREAKS OUT ON BOARD.

"Fire now broke out in several places on board and added to the horrors of our already sorely tried vessel. The fire call was sounded, but many men were dead or wounded and the falling projectiles made it so difficult to operate that there was no chance to subdue the flames.

"It was resolved, therefore, to withdraw from the line, fighting to the very last.

"We turned to the west, our steering apparatus being repaired by this time, but at least eight Japanese ships closed in around us and bombarded us on every side. Our forward guns were useless, but we did good work with our aft twelve-inch guns and those of our six-inch guns which had not been put out of action, although they were worked with only half their complement of men.

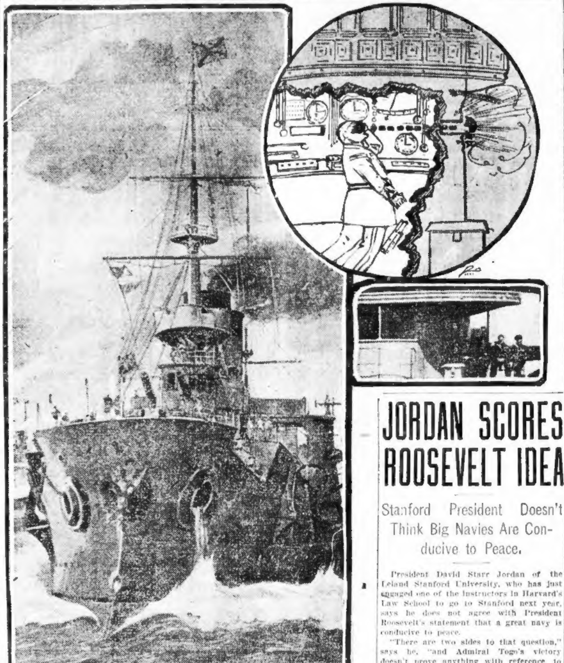
TORPEDO MISSED HER.

"The Borodino sank lower and lower and was a fine target for an overwhelmingly superior enemy, but we fought on, desperately but hopelessly. Toward evening, after a long afternoon of most terrible exhaustion, during which there was no drinking or eating, after we had lost fully 400 men in killed or wounded, we saw two Japanese torpedo destroyers coming towards us. One we sunk with a well-directed shell from a six-inch gun, but the other came on safely, launched her torpedo and swept past our bow unharmed.

"The torpedo missed its mark.

"The chief engineer now came up to inform us that the flames had gained such a headway that it was impossible for him to keep his men below, and a moment later the engine room crew was driven out by the flames. We expected every moment to be blown up, and were preparing for the inevitable, when a whole flotilla of torpedo boats came down upon us and in five minutes the end had come.

"The explosion that followed caused the ship to turn turtle, and I felt myself sinking. When I came up I was struck in the back by a piece of wreckage, but a boat's crew from a destroyer picked me up, together with forty others of the Borodino's men, and took us to the cruiser Kasuga, from which we were transferred to shore."



HOW ADMIRAL VOLKERSAM WAS KILLED.

Admiral Togo reports that the first straight shot of the Battle of the Sea of Japan hit the conning tower of the Russian battleship Osliabia, in which was Admiral Volkersam, and that the Russian commander was killed. The large picture at the right represents the Osliabia coming head on. The circular diagram shows how the Admiral probably was hit by fragments of steel dislodged by the impact of the Japanese shell. The small cut below shows the outside of the Osliabia's conning tower.

IZUMRUD'S CAPTAIN BLEW UP HIS SHIP

ST. PETERSBURG, June 2.—The first detailed account of the great Russian naval disaster received by the Czar from a naval commander of one of the warships that lived through the fight comes from Captain Baron Ferzen of the cruiser Izumrud, who blew up his own vessel after she had run on a reef, to prevent her falling into the hands of the Japanese.

The Barron says that before dark on May 27, the Osliabia, Alexander III. and Borodino had been sunk and that the Kniaz Souvaroff, the Kamchatka and the Ural had been seriously damaged and lost to sight. The command then devolved on Rear Admiral Nebogatoff.

In the evening the Nikolai I., the Orel, the General Admiral Apraxine, the Admiral Seniavin, the Admiral Oushakoff, the Sissol Veliky, the Navorin, the Admiral Nakimoff and the Ixumrud sailed northeastward, the latter being charged to transmit orders to the battleships.

Two other cruisers were cut off from the fleet and were not again seen. The battleships, steaming at fourteen knots, were repeatedly attacked by the Japanese torpedo boats, especially at the extremities of the line.

At dawn it was ascertained that the battleship division consisted of the Nikolai I., the Orel, the General Admiral Apraxine and the Admiral Seniavin.

At sunrise, May 28, smoke from the Japanese ships reappeared on the horizon, whereupon the Admiral gave orders for increased speed. The Admiral Seniavin and the General Admiral Apraxine dropped behind.

Toward 10 o'clock the Japanese fleet appeared, first to port and then to starboard, while the cruiser division manoeuvred behind the Russians to starboard. Baron Ferzen's account continues:

"I was cut off from the squadron, and, finding it impossible to rejoin it, resolved to make for Vladivostok. I put on full speed and the enemy's cruisers came on in pursuit. Owing to the insufficiency of my coal supply and the certainty of meeting the enemy's cruisers, I subsequently altered my course for Vladimir Bay, where I arrived on the night of May 29.

"At 1:30 o'clock next morning, in pitch darkness, the Izumrud ran full on a reef at the entrance to the bay.

"Having only ten tons of coal and seeing that it would be impossible to again float my vessel, I ordered the crew ashore and blew up the Izumrud to prevent her falling into the hands of the enemy. Ten of my sailors were wounded in the battle, but the officers and the rest of the crew are safe."

LINEVITCH HANGED OR SHOT 300 MEN

for a fact that the entire army is honeycombed with revolutionists, and that only the strict discipline of the men at the head of the army has prevented serious outbreaks among the troops.

General Linevitch's act has for a time, it is announced, cowed the troops and officers to submission, but the fear is that it's ultimate result will be to stir up greater activity among the revolutionists in the army and outside. In that event, the course of the Czar is problematical.

Singular examples of the feeling of the troops generally against their government have come to light at various times. In one instance a few months ago a heavy cannon was fired on the palace wherein the royal family was living at the moment. Still later, at the Winter Palace riot, hundreds of shots were fired through the windows by soldiers and even into the Czar's own apartments.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Standard, in a special dispatch to-day, declares that he has received confirmation from the highest sources of the reports of disaffection among officers and troops in Manchuria.

JAPANESE LOSS 113 MEN KILLED AND 424 WOUNDED

TOKIO, June 2.—The announcement is made that the Japanese losses in the great naval battle in Korea Straits were 113 officers and men killed and 421 wounded. These revised figures give a total which is considerably less than the estimate of 800 which was first made by Admiral Togo.

ROJESTVENSKY TELLS HOW HE FELL INTO ENEMY'S TRAP

TOKIO, June 2.—Admiral Rojestvensky at Sesebo, wounded, has offered an explanation of his course in attempting to take his fleet through the Korean Straits. He says he had hoped to clear the Straits of Tsushima under cover of the heavy fog which prevailed. A southwest gale suddenly cleared the fog away and revealed the movement of his fleet, and laid the vessels open to Togo's attack.

The sinking of the Zemtchug which has been unofficially reported since the battle has been confirmed.

The Mikasa, the flagship of Admiral Togo, suffered most in the great sea battle, showing that the Russians did their utmost to put the large warship out of action. The Russions lost, according to the latest figures, 7,000 men who were killed, and 3,000 prisoners.

The municipality of Tokio has arranged a gala program for celebrating the great victory, and to-day the whole city is enjoying a holiday. The city has been decorated with flags in every quarter and the people have turned out in great numbers.

Special exercises and sports of all kinds were held at Hibiya Park. Members of the naval staff occupied prominent positions on the platform.

VLADIMIR WARNED OF DEATH AT HANDS OF TERRORISTS

BERLIN, June 2.—It is stated that the substitution of Grand Duke Michael for Grand Duke Vladimir as the Czar's representative at the wedding of Crown Prince Wilhelm and Duchess Cecilia was actually due to a warning received by the Russian Embassy here stating that Grand Duke Vladimir had been sentenced to death by the Terrorists and that his appearance at the wedding would only result in his execution in Germany.

DID MUTINOUS SAILORS THROW ADMIRAL INTO SEA?

LONDON, June 2.—There is no confirmation of the statement wired by the St. Petersburg correspondent of the Times to the effect that the Russian sailors under Admiral Nebogatoff mutinied and threw the Admiral, together with several of his officers, overboard during the fight and then struck their flags.

Dispatches from Tokio, which so far have been very accurate, give no account of such an event, and give an altogether different version of the surrender of Nebogatoff. Wounded sailors from the Japanese armored cruiser Asama give this version of the surrender, after recounting the story of the fight on Saturday:

"Sunday morning opened misty but the weather soon cleared and we began to hunt for the Russian ships that were left. We found five Russian ships near Liancourt Island and surrounded them. One, supposed to be the Izumrud, escaped. The four others did not fight, but hoisted the Japanese flag over the Russian colors, offering to surrender, it appeared. Captain Yashiro, commanding the Asama, started in a small boat to ascertain if the Russians really wanted to surrender.

"Then Admiral Nebogatoff lowered a boat and came on board the Asama, where he formally surrendered.

JORDAN SCORES ROOSEVELT IDEA

Stanford President Doesn't Think Big Navies Are Conducive to Peace.

President David Starr Jordan of the Leland Stanford University, who has just engaged one of the instructors in Harvard's Law School to go to Stanford next year, says he does not agree with President Roosevelt's statement that a great navy is conducive to peace.

"There are two sides to that question," says he, "and Admiral Togo's victory doesn't prove anything with reference to big navies being arbiters of peace. No navies whatever would seem to point more effectually in that direction."

President Jordan is en route for Europe. In his brief stay in Boston he went out to Cambridge to see if he could pick up a teacher or two for Stanford.

"Being an old Harvard man," he says, "I always look to Harvard for instructors and professors when we need them out in my country."

Reverting to the Oriental topic he continued:

"I think Japan will show herself to be exceedingly lenient in the terms for peace which must surely come soon in her war with Russia.

"The 'Yellow Peril' is all bosh. I believe firmly in the national integrity and the humane advancement of Japan. Japan and China offer us unlimited markets in Asia, and the more they develop nationally, the greater will be our own prosperity in trade relations. Luckily our relations with Japan are very friendly, and will continue to be so. I think if we gave Japan cause to test our strength in the Philippines we would find ourselves unable to hold them."

In regard to the dismissal of Professor Goebel from Stanford, President Jordan says "some of his actions were unprofessional. I asked him to resign. He didn't see fit to, so I resigned him."

MISSING MAN SEEN IN TRANCE

Only Clue in Disappearance of Mulford Martin in England Given by Clairvoyant.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, June 2.—The combined efforts of the Scotland Yard force, clairvoyants, relatives and a staff of private detectives have failed so far to locate Mulford Martin, a wealthy young American of Rye, N. Y., who disappeared mysteriously on May 1 from one of the Brighton, England, music halls.

The only clue on which the searchers are working was furnished by Miss Hartley, an amateur clairvoyant. She says:

"I saw young Martin while I was in a trance. He was bound hand and foot and was lying on the carpet of a luxuriously furnished dining room in a misty, shadowy house."

The disappearance of Martin, who is a cousin of Herbert Barnum Seeley, of "Seeley dinner" notoriety, is sensational. The young man's mother married some time ago a Dr. Walsh of San Francisco. Wishing to continue supervision of her son's education, Mrs. Walsh accompanied him to Europe in the early part of last March. They arrived at Brighton on April 28 and took a suite of rooms at an exclusive hotel.

Martin made friends among the chorus girls of a vaudeville pavilion. On the night of May 1, between acts, the young man, accompanied by one of the chorus girls, walked to the end of the long steel piers. The girl, anxious to get back to her number in the play, hurried from him after promising to return. At 11 o'clock the girl went to look for Martin, but he had disappeared. None of his friends has seen him since.

NORTON WOMAN, AGED 96 YEARS, IS DEAD

TAUNTON, June 2. Mrs. Eliza B. Wheaton died at Norton to-day, in her ninety-sixth year. By her death a large estate will go to Wheaton Seminary of that town, which was founded by her husband's family. She left no children. She did much for the school during her life.

control of the society, and also to eliminate James H. Hyde, who controls the stock."

If Mr. Hyde is sustained in what he claims to be his rights in a majority of the stock by Justice Maddox, it is pointed out that such a scheme cannot succeed. Both Mr. Alexander and Mr. Hyde declare that they will not resign nor allow themselves to be thrown out of office, if they can help it. Each was in consultation with his lawyers yesterday, preparing a defense to the charges collected in the Frick committee report, which will probably be presented at to-day's meeting.

CHARGES EMBODIED IN FRICK REPORT DUE TO ROOSEVELT

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, June 2.—The radical changes recommended by the Frick investigating committee in the affairs of the Equitable Life Assurance Society were based in part on suggestions made by President Roosevelt to Jacob H. Schiff during a conference in Washington some weeks ago, according to a statement made to-day by a prominent member of the committee. Mr. Schiff, who is a close friend of the President, and Nelson W. Cromwell of Panama and San Domingo fame, visited the President while in Washington, and during their conversation the affairs of the Equitable society were discussed.

"I am satisfied that the Equitable needs a thorough house-cleaning from roof to cellar," was the President's characteristic comment.

"There can be no question that if matters go on as they have been going it will result in bad feeling in the insurance world. The Equitable is a parent insurance company and should take the initiative in the matter of insurance reforms."

The President expressed the belief that the results of the Equitable scandal would be beneficial on the whole, and added:

"When I was a member of the Legislature of New York I made a careful study of life insurance. One of the things I practically fought against was what insurance people call deferred dividend payments. I believe that is one of the crowning evils of life insurance."

The Frick committee recommends the abolition of this form of policy by which the insurance companies have been enabled to pile up enormous surpluses at the expense of the policy holders.

The views of the President on this subject were communicated to the committee by Mr. Schiff and resulted in this recommendation.

Recommendations Made by the Frick Committee

That deferred dividend payments be abandoned, and that the society pay more attention to straight-line insurance.

That the profits of the underwriting syndicate must be paid back, in so far as they were shared by officers of the society.

That refusal will be met by legal action.

That there has been gross mismanagement within the society, and that the offices of Alexander and Hyde be reorganized.

That Hyde deserves censure for his methods.

In that year he married Miss Sarah Carlyle Choate of Cambridge, a daughter of Charles F. Choate, president of the Old Colony Railroad.

Mr. Sears has always been a hard worker, paying strict attention to business at all times. He was a man of most generous impulses and took delight in assisting needy people, whose cases he invariably investigated. Many young business men of Boston owe their start in business to Mr. Sears.

He was a patron of art, and Mrs. Sears is an artist of note. He was also greatly interested in music and literature. One of his many benefactions to Yale College was the presentation of the great classical library of the eminent German scholar, Curtius, a few years ago.

He was a member of the Algonquin Club, the St. Botolph Club, the Somerset Club, the Tavern Club, the Thursday Evening Club, the Country Club, the Eastern Yacht Club, and several clubs out of town.

Mr. Sears's fortune is estimated at $30,000,000. He attained considerable notoriety by the fact that he prided himself on paying taxes on a just valuation of his property and was known as the "tax-paying king." His tax bills last year amounted to $74,264.64, representing a valuation of $4,385,700 in real estate and $500,000 personal property.

WOMAN PILOT STOPS PANIC

Captain Mary Green Prevents Passengers From Jumping From Steamer.

PITTSBURG, Pa., June 2.—Captain Mary Green, commander of the steamboat Greenland and the only licensed river woman pilot and captain in the United States, was responsible for saving many lives during a panic on her boat. The panic followed a hurricane, when the bow of the boat crashed into the side of Swallow & Markle's floating theatre at the mouth of the Kanawha River.

Already panic-stricken by the ferocity of the gale, the 200 passengers on the Greenland had hurriedly dressed and rushed on deck.

Standing on the lookout with her two little sons at her side, Captain Green was the coolest person aboard the boat, and she issued orders which soon resulted in the complete control of the Greenland, which had not been badly damaged. While the panic was at its height many of the passengers attempted to jump overboard. Mrs. Green's words of assurance caused them to hesitate, and her display of bravery brought reassurance to the hearts of the timid.

DYING MAN'S WORDS DISCLOSED WADDELL-HAYES ROMANCE, IN WHICH

SIGHT OF BABY'S CLOTHES CAUSED MURDER

Deceived Woman's Sad Story Had Awakened Dead Man's Love.

By Clement L. Pollock.

PREFACE.

MADDENED at the sight of a tiny baby carriage and a pile of dainty baby clothes prepared for the advent of a child that was not his, but that of another man to whom the woman who had been considered his wife had been married, W. Foster Waddell shot and killed John Fred Hayes at Beverly last Friday evening and then set fire to the baby carriage and clothes and burned them to ashes.

This is the real motive for the murder that has been mystifying the police and many residents of Beverly, and behind it is one of the most remarkable domestic situations that was ever found in this country.

Married to Hayes on March 4, the woman who was known as the wife of Waddell masqueraded as Mrs. Waddell before her friends and even her servants, until Hayes with his dying lips whispered:

"Look out for my wife."

Then the amazing romance, which ended in a tragedy, of the beautiful woman and the two men who had come into her life so strangely, became known. Hayes is dead—his murderer is a fugitive. The facts in the romance that follows were given by the woman who has been doubly widowed.

Chapter I.

Under Beauty's Spell.

NO more beautiful young woman could be found in Winnipeg, Manitoba, ten years ago than Maria Charlotta Lindberg. She was then nineteen. She had been born in Stockholm and had crossed the sea with her people. She was of regal figure, and her great mass of brown hair had a glint in it that shone in the sunlight like strands of gold. Her eyes were large and deep blue. Her features were regular and clear-cut as a cameo.

When W. Foster Waddell, a stalwart young Englishman, brilliant and handsome, saw her he fell a willing victim to her great beauty. Waddell was a member of a fine family, in which ministers predominated. His father was a clergyman and two of his brothers are in the church. Foster himself was educated for the pulpit at Oberlin, Ohio. But he drifted away from it and from his home and people. He was the black sheep of the fold.

In Winnipeg young Waddell became greatly interested in the Foresters. He had a predilection for the lecture platform and advocated temperance. He was a fine speaker and a plausible one. So plausible was he that when he asked Miss Lindberg to go to the Foresters' convention at Minneapolis she accepted, so long as many other people were going in the same company. That was just ten years ago.

Chapter II.

"Now We Are Married."

AT the hotel in Minneapolis Waddell renewed his love-making and Charlotta, as he called the young woman, listened to him.

"I want you to marry me while we are in this city," he said to her.

"But Foster," she said, "my people do not want me to marry you. You know that they have opposed it all along. They think you are too wild."

"But I am not, indeed I am not, and I'll take care of you and love you as long as I live. Won't you marry me, Charlotta?"

The young woman hesitated. She had gone over the matter time and time again in her mind and always came to the same conclusion—that if he insisted she would have to yield. He pleaded with all the silvery eloquence at his command. And she said, "Yes."

"I will go and get a minister at once," replied Waddell, joyously, and he disappeared.

Soon after that the young man reappeared with a clergyman. At least the young woman believed he was a clergyman. He was dressed like one and acted like one. In the parlor of the hotel, with some of the Foresters people present, the marriage ceremony was performed. As the man pronounced them "man and wife" Waddell slipped a plain gold ring over her finger.

"Now we are married," said the fond husband, "and I am happy."

Chapter III.

A Woman Disillusioned.

FOR a few brief months the handsome young bride was very happy. Then the fearful temper of the husband began to assert itself. He was dictatorial and shiftless. He had no steady work, and Mrs. Waddell found that she would have to do her share and more to keep the little family going.

Waddell was a wanderer. He could not settle down in any place. They went to Chicago, thence to Toronto and from there to Ottawa. Being able to do nothing very well but talk, he drifted into the insurance business and would have made a great success at it had he worked steadily. Finally the couple moved to Salem, Waddell still calling himself an insurance agent, but now and then going off on lecturing tours. On small dodgers he had printed his picture in full-dress costume and below advertised himself as follows:

LECTURE BEGINS AT 7:45 O'CLOCK.

Permanent Address, Boston, Mass.

The life of the handsome young woman who had followed the fortunes of the adventurer who "lived by his wits" was anything but a happy one now. She started a boarding house in Salem and supported herself, and contributed to his support as well. It was decided that they move to Beverly. That was about three years ago. Mrs. Waddell took the Cabot House, on the main business street of the fashionable little city.

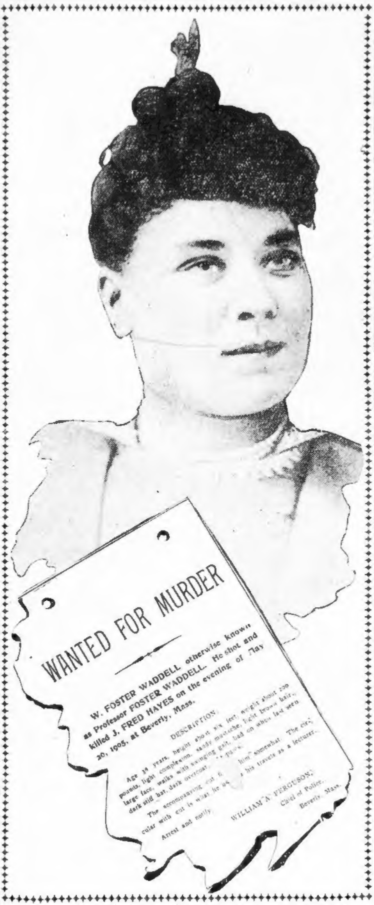
Chapter IV.

His Sin Found Out.

IT was about this time that Mrs. Waddell learned that her husband had been seen in the company of another woman. She finally found out through a friend who this other woman was, and her friend saw the other woman.

"What are you running about with Foster Waddell for," asked Mrs. Waddell's friend, "when you know that he has a wife in Beverly?"

"Oh," replied the woman, "that woman in Beverly is not his wife. He told me that he was not legally married to her, as he had a wife living in Manitoba at the time he went through the ceremony with her. He was married to a German girl there."



WANTED FOR MURDER

W. FOSTER WADDELL otherwise known as Professor FOSTER WADDELL. He shot and killed J. FRED HAYES on the evening of May 26, 1905, at Beverly, Mass.

DESCRIPTION.

Arrest and notify

WILLIAM A. FERGUSON, Chief of Police, Beverly, Mass.

"MRS. WADDELL" AND POLICE CIRCULAR.

All this came to the ears of Mrs. Waddell. It confirmed what Mrs. Waddell had previously heard rumored—that Waddell had been married in Manitoba. Mrs. Waddell taxed her husband about the matter. He at first denied it.

"But I believe it is true," said Mrs. Waddell. "I believe that you deceived me at Minneapolis and that we were really not married at all. Is it true?"

"Yes, it is true," admitted Waddell. "I had a wife living at the time and we were not legally married. But I am willing to have another ceremony performed and to make you my legal wife now."

"No, Foster Waddell, I have had enough of you—I shall never marry you again and you can go your way and I will go mine. From this time forth we are nothing to each other."

"Oh, very well," responded Waddell carelessly and left the house.

Chapter V.

Pity Kindles Into Love.

JOHN FRED HAYES, who was employed as a cutter in a shoe factory, went to the Waddell house to board. He was a small man and had nothing of the brilliant qualities of Waddell, but he was kind. Once he fell ill and Mrs. Waddell, who was naturally a nurse, cared for him. He sympathized with her when he saw the treatment that was accorded her by Waddell.

The pity that the warm-hearted shoe worker had for the woman soon grew into love. One day Mrs. Waddell told Hayes her whole story—how she had thought all these years that she was Waddell's wife, but that in reality she was not.

"Why don't you leave Waddell and marry me?" Hayes asked. "I love you and I will be kind to you."

"I have left Waddell," she replied. "I have nothing whatever to do with him. But I don't want it to be known now that I'm not his wife. I want to shield the man for his people's sake—he has asked me to do it."

"Marry me, and we can keep it a secret for a while," pleaded Hayes.

But Mrs. Waddell demurred. Hayes kept asking her day after day to become his wife. They were living at the Beverly house, and Waddell was away most of the time. Occasionally he would appear and sometimes take a meal with Mrs. Waddell, but otherwise they were strangers.

Got Her Money at Gun's Point.

One day within the past year Mrs. Waddell said to Waddell:

"Foster, I'm going to marry Fred Hayes. He loves me and I love him. He will be kind to me. But we will keep it a secret for a time in order that you may be protected."

"Very well," replied Waddell; "I hope you will be happy. But I think you would do better to marry me again."

"No, I have made up my mind about that," replied the woman. "I shall never live with you again, and I do not wish for you to bother me."

"Well, I want some money, and you have got to give it to me," said Waddell, fiercely.

"I have none for you," replied the woman, rising from the chair in which she was seated.

In a moment Waddell pulled out a revolver and pointing it at her, according to the woman, said:

"Give me that money or I will shoot you where you stand."

Mrs. Waddell read determination in the eyes of the desperate man. Without a word she got the money, handed it to him and he left the house.

"Had I not given him the money," Mrs. Waddell told a friend after the incident, "I am certain I would not be alive at this minute."

Chapter VI.

Man and Wife Before God.

ON March 4, last, Hayes and Mrs. Waddell went to Lynn and were married. They called on the Rev. Roscoe L. Greene of the First Methodist Church, and he performed the ceremony. Following is a copy of the certificate of marriage:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Attest.
ROSCOE L. GREENE, Clergyman.

Keep Wedding Secret.

When Mr. Hayes and his bride returned home they talked the situation over.

"Now, Fred," said the wife, "we will keep this quiet for my sake and for Waddell's. I will still call myself Mrs. Waddell. In time we can move away from here, and then, after it all blows over, maybe come back."

"All right," replied the husband, "and I will help you to keep the matter secret. I will even take my meals at some other house, but will retain my room here."

And so that queer domestic arrangement was settled upon and carried out. Even the hired girl in the house did not know that Hayes, the boarder, had become the husband and that Waddell, the husband, had become the boarder. When Waddell dropped into the house, which he did casually and coolly, the girl placed a plate on the table for him as usual.

One day after the marriage had taken place Waddell dropped into the house, and, addressing Mrs. Hayes, said:

"Hello, Charlotta; I hope that you are happy now—I suppose you are."

Asked Her to Adopt Child.

"Well," replied the woman, "I'm not as happy as I would be if I were living openly as the wife of the man I married instead of posing here as your wife. But I'm reasonably happy, and when Fred and I move to ourselves and we have our baby, then I think that I will be happy. Don't you think that I deserve to be happy after working so hard all these years?"

"Oh, I suppose so," retorted Waddell, "but I still think you would have done better to have remarried me."

And then the deft fingers of the woman began to get busy with dainty baby clothes. There was that wonderful mother-light in her great blue eyes, and she was the nearest to happiness she had ever been. It had been one of the crosses of their lives that they had never had a baby while she and Waddell lived together.

"Why don't you adopt a child?" Waddell said to her once.

He Secretly Married Her and Fell a Victim to Waddell's Jealousy.

"No," she said, "if I cannot have one of my own, I'll never raise another's."

Chapter VII.

A Dream and an Awakening.

ON Friday of last week Mrs. Hayes went about the duties of her house with a happy heart. She sang happily snatches of song and looked with pride on her really well-kept house. And she dreamed of the day that she and her husband would go to their home in Lynn, where she could be known before the world as she really was—the honest wife of an honest man.

It was about noon when Waddell walked into the kitchen where Mrs. Hayes was. He came in with all the nonchalance of a man who had a perfect right to be there.

"Hello," he said as a greeting to Mrs. Hayes.

"Hello," she replied. "You have a nerve to come in here this way."

"Oh, never mind," he replied. "I just came to get some of my things. My bicycle puncture repairing outfit is here."

That settled the matter for a time. The girl employed by Mrs. Hayes greeted him. They had a few words of a commonplace character. He walked out but remained about the house during the afternoon. In the evening the girl put a plate down for Waddell. He saw it and said:

"No, I will not have any supper here this evening. I have a headache."

Objected to Baby Clothes.

Fred Hayes came home and was going out for his dinner. The girl had gone for an evening out by this time. Mrs. Hayes said to her husband:

"Fred, don't go out for your dinner, and I'll get you something. He agreed to stay. Waddell knew of it. It was about 7 o'clock when Waddell sauntered into the kitchen. On the way he passed a new baby carriage that Mrs. Hayes had bought. Near it were the fluffy baby clothes that she had made. Waddell walked up to the kitchen stove and took a few matches from a holder on the wall.

"I never had those silk shirts and other fancy things that you have made," he said, referring to the baby clothing, "when I came into the world. You are pretty stylish, aren't you?"

"I don't see how it concerns you as long as I pay for them," retorted the woman, busying herself about the stove preparing her husband's supper.

"Oh, don't mind me," Waddell replied lightly and without the least exhibition of feeling.

Waddell walked from the kitchen, and, passing through a corridor, approached the room occupied by Hayes. Next to Hayes's room is one that was occupied by a man named Norman. Waddell opened Norman's door, and, apparently seeing his mistake, passed on to Hayes's.

Hayes at this time was leaning back in a Morris chair. A bed was between him and Waddell. Waddell said something to Hayes and there was a reply. Another remark was interchanged somewhat louder, but not loud enough for Norman, next door, to hear. Then there were three shots in rapid succession.

Details of the Tragedy.

In the kitchen Mrs. Hayes heard them. She imagined right away that a tragedy was being enacted. She ran frantically to the room occupied by her husband. He leaned back in the chair unconscious, his eyes glassy.

"Oh, Fred," she cried, "has he killed you?"

But Hayes did not hear her. She ran to a window and shouted for the police. A doctor across the street ran to her help. He kept her out of the room. She wandered aimlessly about, wringing her hands, and found herself back in the kitchen.

Then she saw her baby carriage and baby clothing afire, and attempted to extinguish the flames. She burned her hands severely, but was unable to save anything.

Waddell in the meantime had been firing the house and the stable in the rear. The firemen were soon on the grounds and the flames were put out. In a hallway Mrs. Hayes passed Waddell. He said nothing. He left the house, and the last she saw of him he was sauntering up the street with his overcoat over his arm.

Chapter VIII.

"Look After My Wife."

IN the room in which the wounded man lay the doctor was at work. He found that two of the bullets had hit Hayes. As the doctor and some others rushed up the stairway after the shooting they met Waddell.

"What's happened?" one of them asked him.

"Oh, a crazy man has shot himself up there," Waddell replied.

Hayes regained consciousness in the room for a few moments.

"Why did you shoot yourself?" asked the doctor.

"Waddell did it," replied the dying man.

They took Hayes to the hospital. He regained consciousness again.

"Look after my wife," he said.

And that was the first intimation the public had of the fact that Hayes was the husband of the woman who had been known as Mrs. Waddell.

Chapter IX.

No Mercy for Waddell.

I SAW Mrs. Hayes in her home yesterday. She was being helped by a man in scouring the life-blood of her husband from the chair in which he received the fatal bullets. She is a very beautiful woman, and her house, with the exception of the part littered by the debris of the fire, was the acme of neatness. The woman told me the facts that have been detailed in the preceding chapters.

"Have you any idea where Waddell is?" I asked.

"Not in the least—but I think he will get away. He is a slick one. Why, if he were to walk in here at this moment and tell you that the moon is green he would make you believe it."

"And were you never happy with him?"

"He was a beast in his treatment of me. He thought nothing of knocking me down with his fist. He treated me cruelly."

"And was Fred Hayes good to you?"

"Yes, he was good to me and loved me, and I loved him. We would have been happy in our home. I was counting on it and dreaming"—

Here Mrs. Hayes broke down and wept bitterly. Her heart is in the grave with her husband.

"Do you want Waddell caught and punished?" I asked.

"Yes, I do; a man who would do a thing like that should be shown no mercy. I hope that they catch him and punish him. I would expect to be punished if I did anything like that."

Chapter X.

The Brand of Cain.

WHERE is Waddell? The police of Beverly have scattered broadcast throughout the country a circular headed: "Wanted for Murder." After that a description of Waddell is given. In another circular is his picture. It shows him with his mustache. That, it is believed, he has cut off.

A woman called on Mrs. Waddell yesterday with the intention of buying her furniture. She is a Boston woman, and has a warm heart.

"I should like to take this dear woman home with me and take care of her for a while," she said. "She needs care."

"But what of that man who wanders about knowing that he is a murderer?" asked Mrs. Hayes. "What a load of sin is on his heart. I must try to be brave and bear up under my trouble."

WILL APPEAL TO WOMEN FOR MRS. ROGERS

Mrs. W. J. Blickensderfer to Make Further Effort to Save Condemned Woman.

TO COVER WHOLE COUNTRY

STAMFORD, Ct., June 2.—Mrs. William J. Blickensderfer is preparing another appeal to the women of America on behalf of Mary Rogers, whom Governor Bell has reprieved for a second time.

The appeal will be indorsed by the Women's Legislative League of New York. It will be spread among the women of every State in the Union.

In her mail to-day Mrs. Blickensderfer received a copy of a letter addressed to Governor Bell, of Vermont, by T. W. Cantwell, of Albany, a handwriting expert, who testified for the State in the trial of Mary Rogers.

Mr. Cantwell says he firmly believes, from his knowledge of her admitted handwriting, that it was that of an insane person. This letter had a good deal of influence with Governor Bell in moving him to grant a second reprieve, it is said.

It does not appear why Cantwell did not give this testimony when the case was being tried, but it is said he was not allowed to.

MRS. ROGERS TOLD OF GRANTING OF THE SECOND REPRIEVE

Special to the Boston American.

WINDSOR, Vt., June 2.—Mary Rogers has learned she has three weeks more at least to live. Sheriff Peck told her of the Governor's reprieve. She stood nervously drumming her fingers as she listened.

"The Governor has granted you another reprieve for a short time," said the Sheriff. "I will be up later in the afternoon to read it to you and leave you a copy."

"I am very glad," she said. "I thank you very much, you almost always bring me good news. I hope you always will."

The Governor's reprieve bears date of June 1, although he decided a couple of days to issue it. It was brought to Windsor by Charles J. Walter, secretary to the Governor. It was immediately turned over to Sheriff Peck, who told Mrs. Rogers of its contents.

Mr. Walter was met at the station by Superintendent Lovell, and was driven immediately to the State Prison, where Mary Rogers has been confined for so long. Immediately after seeing Mr. Peck, the Governor's secretary left town.

MRS. BLICKENSDERFER CORRECTS A BOSTON NEWSPAPER REPORT

Managing Editor of the AMERICAN:

A certain Boston newspaper, after giving us to understand that it favored mercy for Mary Rogers, is now apparently trying to upset all our efforts in her behalf. In its Monday issue it asserted under date of Montpelier that I was unable to assist them (the lawyers) financially. I was compelled to wire the following dispatch to the newspaper:

> Your reference to my husband is unwarranted. He is not a clerk in the Blickensderfer Company, but the vice-president, stockholder and a director. All my friends know I possess my own fortune. I have spent $300 on the Rogers case. I do not ask my husband for money for my own charities. Kindly correct.

I trust the BOSTON AMERICAN will stand a better friend to us in this Rogers case than this other newspaper. Money is again coming in as a result of a second appeal. Even could I spare a million for the case my husband would never approve of my making it a "one woman" affair, though I stand ready to contribute again and again. I am sorry that any paper of standing should resort to interviews that contain untruths. There is plenty in this affair that is at once true and sensational. There will be abundant material besides "faked" correspondence.

Mr. Hearst's papers stand for truth and they may yet save this unhappy girl. Respectfully,

MRS. WILLIAM BLICKENSDERFER.

SAW MISSING LYNN WOMAN IN BEACH CROWD

W. J. Sawtelle Is Given a Clue to Whereabouts of Long-Absent Wife.

WILL RENEW HIS SEARCH

Mrs. William J. Sawtelle of Lynn, who has been unaccountably absent from home since May 23, has been seen at Crescent Beach, where she was watching a merry-go-round. Her husband is planning to go to Crescent Beach to-night and renew there his search for his wife. He cannot explain her mysterious absence, save by mental worry.

"I want Fannie back," he said, "and the children miss her. The baby cries for 'mamma.' If Fannie would only come home she would be welcome."

The Sawtelles live in a comfortable home in the rear of the Oxford Club building, Lynn. They have two girls, one three years and the other eight months old. May 23 Mrs. Sawtelle left the house with the children. Her husband thought she was going into Boston shopping. She left the children with her sister, Mrs. Jones, of No. 37 Ireson street, Lynn. She started, presumably for Boston, and has not been seen by any of her family since.

Mr. Sawtelle notified the police of surrounding places and made diligent search himself. He was at Crescent Beach only yesterday afternoon looking for her, but did not see her. But later in the day F. H. Symonds, son of a Lynn furniture dealer, was watching one of the merry-go-rounds at that beach, when he noticed Mrs. Sawtelle. She was alone and was watching the merry-go-round and the crowd. She seemed all right so far as Symonds could observe. He is not acquainted with her, though he knows her by sight.

After his return to Lynn, Symonds notified Mr. Sawtelle, who now has hopes of finding his wife.

INVENTOR WINS AGAINST CITY

Clark M. Doten, inventor of a gangway to a ferryboat drop used on the Boston ferries, has won his suit against the city of Boston in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. The decision, written by Judge Lowell, was handed down to-day.

In the first instance Judge Aldrich, in the Circuit Court, disregarding the master's finding of $6,000 damages against the city, gave Doten nominal damages only. The full bench of the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the Circuit Court and ordered a new trial. The city is obliged to pay the costs of the appeal.

SPECULATED, LOST, COMMITS SUICIDE

NEW LONDON, Ct., June 2.—Chauncey B. McCreery, a former conductor on the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, committed suicide by asphyxiation in the apartments of Brainard Lodge of Masons. Some time ago McCreery recovered $8,000 for injuries received while at work on the railroad. He invested the money in the stock market and lost most of it.

CHARITY BEQUESTS IN KELLEY WILL

By the will of Elizabeth Kelley of Charlestown several institutions in Boston will be benefited. The will leaves $300 to the Little Sisters of the Poor, $100 to St. Mary's Church, North End, $300 to the Catholic Home for Destitute Children, $500 to the Free Home for Consumptives, and small bequests are made to other charitable organizations.

WORMS

"I had for years suffered from what medical men called Dyspepsia and Catarrh of the Stomach. In August I purchased a box of Cascarets and was surprised to find that I had 'em'—yes—a wiggling, squirming mass left me. Judge our doctor's surprise when I showed him thirty feet, and in another day the remainder about the same length of a tapeworm that had been sapping my vitality for years. I have enjoyed the best of health ever since. I trust this testimonial will appeal to other sufferers."

FALL FROM WINDOW WON HUSBAND FOR EDITH COO

Young Surgeon Fell in Love With Her in Hospi and They Were Married Quietly.

MRS. EDITH COOK MORRIS.

ERNEST R. MORRIS

Bride and Groom in Hospital Romance

After lying unconscious twelve days in the hospital as a result of falling from a third-story window, and then enduring long weeks of suffering, Miss Edith M. Cook of No. 28 Clive street, Jamaica Plain, while convalescing, lost her heart to an attentive and handsome young doctor and won a husband.

The former Miss Cook, who is twenty-two years of age and very pretty, is now Mrs. Ernest R. Morris. Her husband is a young man from Chicago who came to the Boston City Hospital to take a special course in surgery. The marriage took place on November 16 last and they kept it a secret, so far as the public was concerned, until it was discovered by the BOSTON AMERICAN.

The accident in which the young woman was almost killed created a sensation about a year ago. Miss Cook charged Mrs. Elizabeth Rhea with pushing her from the window and Mrs. Rhea was arrested. The case was dropped. Jealousy, it was alleged, was at the bottom of the matter.

Not Sorry for Accident.

The bride herself told a reporter of the BOSTON AMERICAN about her romance. Her narrow escape from death and her suffering are forgotten in her happiness.

"Yes, it is true that I am married," said Mrs. Morris, "but I don't know how you found it out. Well, on the whole, I am not sorry now that I fell out of the window, for otherwise I would not have met my husband. I am very happy, and truly believe that but for my husband's daily visits to me I would not have survived.

"How did we meet? I really don't think I ought to tell you, but I will. It was this way. After suffering intensely for several weeks, I was finally allowed to get a little fresh air and sunshine on the veranda in a reclining chair. I was then feeling fairly good. While buying a BOSTON AMERICAN from the man who visits the hospital with papers, Dr. Morris, who is taking a special course in surgery there, came running up the veranda steps to pass into another building. He was going to wake an orderly. 'Hey, Morris!' shouted the paper man. 'Come over here. I want you to meet my friend Edith.'

"Dr. Morris stopped for a few moments, asked how I was feeling and if I was getting enough reading matter.

His Visits Aided Cure.

"The next day he called while I was on the veranda and brought me some books and flowers. He said he read of my case in the Chicago American before coming to Boston and was much interested. He thought I had been very much wronged.

"After that we became good friends. He visited me every day and talked encouragingly to me. I really believe I would have died but for the new courage his visits and talks gave me. You see, I was in the hospital from May 26 until the latter part of August, and the ordeal was terrible. Dr. Morris's visits were the bright spots in the long siege of sickness.

"When I left the hospital he asked for the privilege of calling at my home and I wrote my address on a card. Two weeks later he proposed marriage and on November 16 we went to the Church of the Advent and were married.

"Ernest and I are very happy. We are living with my mother. Ernest says in a laughing way that he is glad I got hurt and I tell him that I am not sorry."

SEEKS TO ANNUL SIRE'S WEDDING

Mrs. Ella A. Chase, daughter of Charles C. Sanderson of Oakdale, R. I., seventy-six years old, who married Mrs. Carrie L. Johnson, aged 35, about a year ago in Providence, has filed in the Norfolk County Court a bill for the annulment of her father's marriage, on the ground that he was and is insane, and that undue influence was exerted to bring about the marriage to Mrs. Johnson.

Mrs. Chase was her father's housekeeper up to the time of his marriage to Mrs. Johnson.

RICH CHINESE HELD UP WHEN IVERNIA DOCKS

Aristocratic Tourists Photographed and Examined to Satisfy Law.

K. P. King, Z. P. King, S. G. King and Miss T. King, the Chinese tourists who arrived at this port from Liverpool on the Ivernia yesterday and were detained by the immigration officials, according to the provisions of the Chinese immigration laws, were released to-day, the Canadian Pacific Railway giving bonds for their transportation out of the country.

The party will go to New York to-day and then to Montreal. From that city they will journey to Vancouver via the Canadian Pacific Railway and sail from that port for China.

To a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter to-day Chinese Inspector Schell said: "Such cases are very common in the Pacific ports, but this is the first case of the kind the Boston officials have had to deal with. We had no knowledge that the party was aboard the Ivernia until the steamer reached this port and the government officials boarded her.

Had to Be Photographed.

"Every courtesy possible was extended the visitors and the arrangements for their transportation out of the country were concluded quickly and without any friction."

The party has been in England attending King's College, and are now on their way back to China.

Their uncle is Zu Sun Yuan, Governor of the great Province of Shanghai, and one of the most influential men in the Flowery Kingdom.

When the big liner was coming up the harbor, Chinese Commissioner A. P. Schell boarded it, and found that the party did not have bonds, photographs or any of the other credentials necessary for the admittance of Chinese into the United States. When he told them they could not land until they had been photographed and had furnished bonds of $500 each they were shocked, but complied with the law. They were driven to a photographic studio, and then driven back to the Ivernia, where they spent the night.

Have Mastered English.

The men have mastered the English language well, and dress in the strictest conformity to occidental fashions.

"I do not like America at all," said Mr. K. T. King, as he talked of his hold-up on the Ivernia. "It discriminates against my people and treats them unfairly. In China the middle and upper classes are boycotting American goods because of this discrimination. I can understand why there should be legislation against coolies, but I cannot see why the Chinese of the upper classes should be discriminated against."

Miss King is a charming young woman and wears Chinese apparel. Her feet are small, in conformity to the custom of the upper class women in China, and she wears the silken trousers and kimono of her country. She is well-educated and an accomplished musician.

'B-E-A-U-T-I-F-U-L HOME,' EXCLAIMS LITTLE CLARA

Four-Year-Old Marshall Girl Is Delighted at Home Procured By AMERICAN Story.

CLARA FLORENCE MARSHALL

Little Girl Who Has Found Pleasant Home.

Pretty little four-year-old Clara Florence Marshall, for whom her foster mother, Mrs. Isaiah Marshall of No. 10 Bromley street, Roxbury, has been trying to find a home where the child would have advantages which the limited means of the Marshall home could not afford, has made her own selection from the two hundred offers received because of the story printed in the BOSTON AMERICAN.

The pictures and description of Clara caused a veritable scramble for possession of her. The making of a selection was a difficult problem, and it was determined to take the child around to several of the nearby places, and let her decide the momentous question of her future home and guardians.

"I like here so very, very much," were the words with which she decided it.

"Why do you like here better than where they had the three 'hossies' and the 'sheepie-doggie'?" asked Mrs. Marshall.

"Oh, Mamma, this is b-e-a-u-tiful," was the enthusiastic reply.

Clara Florence's new home will be in a handsome mansion located about fifty miles from Boston. At the request of Mrs. Marshall, the exact location is not given.

Would Not Hear "No."

Two well-dressed women, who had called at the BOSTON AMERICAN office on Memorial Day and would accept no refusal, proceeded to Roxbury, captured the foster mother and the child and took them to their home. They showed the houses and lands, horses, rich furniture, musical instruments and serving people, proving in a hundred ways that little Clara would want nothing for the future. They invited her foster mother to remain "mother" always to little Clara, while the child should address her benefactors as her "aunties"; legal adoption and a villa at the seashore were added in the prospect.

"But," said Mrs. Marshall, the honest-hearted foster mother, "I have almost promised this child to another family near Boston and the members expect to take her home this evening."

"Leave it to the child herself," returned the women. Little Clara seized Mrs. Marshall's hand and led her from room to room with almost an air of proprietorship, touching the keys of the piano and trying in vain to get a sound out of the big house organ. "This is so nice, so nice," she said. And Mrs. Marshall cried a little and said, "let it be so."

"Let me have one last day with her," begged Mrs. Marshall of the women, and so Clara returned to Roxbury.

"The nice women will give me a great big dollie and dollie wagon, and a hossie and a doggie and everything," said the little girl to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter. "I can have lots of candy and I can see my mamma every time I want to. Yes, and I'll give my dollie and all my things to my cousin, Mamie. She's just three years old and she can keep them always, because I'll have new ones."

BRIDAL PAIR ESCAPE IN AUTO

WORCESTER, June 2.—Lieutenant Nicholas J. Smith of Battery B, First Battalion Light Infantry, was married at St. Peter's Church to Miss Mary J. Quinn, and the couple were forced to start on their honeymoon in an automobile to escape friends, who had planned to play some practical jokes at their expense.

During the reception at the bride's home several carriages were lavishly decorated, especially the carriage which was supposed to take the newly-married couple to the railway station. Just before it was time to start, however, Lieutenant Smith and his bride were spied speeding away in an automobile. Several carriages followed them and attempted to overtake them, but were left far behind. The couple boarded a Boston train at Westboro.

NEEDHAM PLANS FOR BIG FOURTH OF JULY

Needham will have this year the biggest Independence Day celebration in her history. A committee of fifteen representative citizens are in charge of the affair. Frank J. Donahue is chairman, William F. Casey secretary, and John L. Twigg treasurer. The celebration will consist of a baseball game, a band concert, athletic sports and fireworks. About $800 will be raised for the occasion.

HOLD BAZAAR AT "MRS. JACK'S"

A bazaar and concert will be given on the afternoon of June 16 in the music room of Mrs. John L. Gardner's Fenway Court and in the garden adjoining the Fenway Palace on the east side for the benefit of the Free Bed Fund of Millet Sanatorium for Consumptives at East Bridgewater.

Mrs. Gardner has offered the use of the music room and garden for this charity. It is announced in the circulars, however, that the "Fenway Court" proper, where the famous art museum is located, is not included in the offer. The garden and music room only will be open.

BE A QUEEN AND WEAR A CROWN.

A new feature for the girls, a cut out mask of a queen, in all her regal splendor, will be introduced in next Sunday's HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN. It is unique and will please the little ones in your household.

THIEVES GET JEWELRY.

While Mrs. Ellen Stover of No. 8 Middlesex avenue, Swampscott, was absent from her home, thieves forced a rear door and ransacked the house, securing about $200 worth of jewelry.

Bridal Edition of American Next Sunday

A Million Dollar Bridal Gown of Pearls.

The Magazine Section of next SUNDAY'S BOSTON AMERICAN is a bridal number of great beauty and extraordinary interest. June is the month of roses and of brides, and there are countless things in the edition that will attract the attention not only of brides themselves, but all the women who once were brides or who hope some day to be. The million dollar bridal gown of pearls that was made for the daughter of the Sultan of Turkey under the guard of soldiers is one feature of a very novel character. The story written in Constantinople will tell all about it.

How a Poet's Wit Won Him a Wife.

This is one of the prettiest love stories in real life that has been written in many years. It tells how Oliver Herford was married to the woman he loved through the intervention of Miss Cissy Loftus. It all started at a dinner where Mr. Herford was so delightfully witty that Miss Margaret Regan, herself a poetess, was enchanted. How the wedding took place and the part that Miss Loftus played in it will be told in detail in the next BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

The Luckiest and Yet Unluckiest Bride of Year.

From Berlin comes this remarkable story of a bride. On June 6 the wedding bells are to ring for the little Duchess Cecilia of Mecklenberg-Schwerin, who will become the prospective Empress of Germany. How can she ever get on with such a father-in-law as Emperor William and such a crazy-headed mother as Duchess Anastasia? The story is interestingly told in the Magazine Section of the next BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

Feigned Insanity and Now in a Madhouse.

The amazing facts about Miss Annie Williams will interest the world. She feigned insanity in order to get into a madhouse and then when she attempted to get out was horrified to find that they would not release her. She has been incarcerated five years, and when she assures the keepers that she is not crazy they merely smile at her. It is as thrilling a story as that told by Grace Darby, who escaped from the Taunton Insane Asylum. Miss Williams tells it herself and it will be printed in next SUNDAY'S BOSTON AMERICAN.

Building an Ark For the Next Deluge.

That is what the Holy Rollers are doing at Benton, Mich. Their frenzied antics form one of the strangest stories of one of the queerest religious sects ever told. In the next BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN will be told how these people are flocking to their "promised land" with a queer zoological collection to put aboard of the ark when the flood comes.

The Smart Etiquette of the Wedding Day.

Things every June bride wants to know. Every detail of the important ceremony is explained in the fourth article in the new series by Mrs. Linda Hull Larned, author of "The Hostess of Today." Then there is a picture of the June bride, drawn especially for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN by Penrhyn Stanlaws.

The June Bride and Her Clothes.

The June bride is garbed in the symbols of youth and romance, and satin is discarded in favor of mousseline-de-soie and silver. Mrs. Osborn, creator of fashions for the fashionable women of America, writes authoritatively of the dress of those who are to be married this month.

How to Further Beautify the Already Beautiful Bride.

There are two full pages finely illustrated treating on his intensely interesting subject. A famous beauty doctor tells about it. Fruit and vegetables form a conspicuous part of the treatment. See the next BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN for this exclusive feature.

Sensible Suggestions for Wedding Presents.

Nearly everybody will have to give somebody a wedding present this month, and what a lot of trouble it is to think just what to give. That is why these hints will be found very helpful.

Why They Sang the TeDeum for Poor Barry.

He was only a dog, but he had saved many lives, and when he gave his own life trying to save others the good monks at Saint Bernard Pass Hospice buried him with honor.

The Funniest Comic Section Published.

No one ever wants to miss the great Comic Section of the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN, and to-morrow it will be funnier than ever.

SOCIETY CROWD AT CAMBRIDGE WEDDING

Boston society turned out in force at the wedding of Miss Esther Lowell Burnett, daughter of Edward Burnett, of Cambridge, and granddaughter of James Russell Lowell, to Stanley Cunningham, Jr., of Cohasset, in Christ Church, Cambridge. Bishop Lawrence married the couple, assisted by Rev. Prescott Evarts, pastor of the church. George Cunningham, of Cohasset, was best man, and the bridesmaids were Miss Mary Cunningham, Miss Eleanor Cook, Miss Anna Gage and Miss Lucy Turner. A large reception followed the wedding.

BE A QUEEN AND WEAR A CROWN.

A new feature for the girls, a cut-out mask of a queen, in all her regal splendor, will be introduced in next Sunday's HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN. It is unique and will please the little ones in your household.

WARDS WILL FIGHT FOR PROBATE OF PATTEE WILL

Chief Beneficiary Under Pattee Will.

JAMES. M. BRENNAN.

Nephews, Cut Off with Small Sums, May Try to Secure $150,000 Estate.

The two principal beneficiaries under the will of Charles H. Pattee will fight to the end any attempt on the part of Mr. Pattee's sons to defeat the will of the wealthy Boston man as to the disposition of his estate.

"It will not be of any use for his two nephews to fight the will," said James M. Brennan, the youth who received the income of the bulk of the estate, to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter to-day. "Uncle Charlie was in his right mind and knew what he was doing when he made the will. He left his money where he wanted to. That is all there is to it."

Mrs. Katherine Fitzgerald Watts, a cousin of Mr. Brennan, who received a legacy of 2,000, said she was prepared to contest any attem$pt to break the will. "I am going to have a talk with Colonel Gaston, the executor, as soon as I can," she said, "and be governed by his advice."

A Man of Wealth.

"Charlie" Pattee, as the dead man was affectionately .called .by .thousands of friends, was known as a man of considerable wealth. He was especially regarded as friendly to the theatrical profession. It was as the "actors friend" that more people had heard of him than in any other connection, although he was a talented member of the Suffolk County Bar. He had been connected with some famous trials, one of the most notable being the Ada Richmond-John Stetson will case. He was a long friend of John Stetson.

So able an attorney is believed to have drawn a will that any contestant will have great difficulty in breaking. Yet it is regarded as probable that his two nearest relatives, Charles H. Pattee and George D. Pattee of Campton, N. H., nephews, who are cut off with $100 and $2,000 respectively, will attempt to have the testament set aside.

It is estimated that Mr. Pattee's personal fortune amounted to between $150,000 and $200,000. He has made James M. Brennan, a lad who has been brought up by Mr. Pattee, but was never, so far as is known, legally adopted, his principal beneficiary. Brennan is to receive $2,000 when he is twenty-one, and the income of the estate for the remainder of his life, after which the principal will go to various charitable institutions.

Nephew Married Actress.

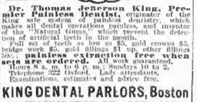
Mrs. Watts, who, with young Brennan, was a member of Mr. Pattee's immediate household, having been much befriended by the lawyer since the death of her father, William E. Fitzgerald, who retired from the liquor business and for twenty-three years lived at the Winthrop home as Mr. Pattee's closest friend, told a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter that the reason Charles E. Pattee was cut off with $100 in his uncle's will was because of young Pattee's marriage to Miss Leonora Bradley, an actress, formerly of the Castle Square stoe company. There was a discrepancy between their ages, Mrs. Watts says, which made the marriage distasteful to the elder Mr. Pattee, and a bitter quarrel followed the young man's announcement to his uncle of his intention to wed.

Mrs. Watts says Mr. Pattee went to New Hampshire last Summer to visit his nephews, but did not remain long.

The Honorable William A. Gaston is named as executor of the estate and guardian of young Brennan. Under the will the bulk of the estate will eventually be divided between the Old Men's Home, the Home for Aged Couples and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

Dr. King's Life=like=Teeth

Are the most perfect and natural looking teeth that dental science has ever produced. Every tooth, either on a set or in a bridge or crown, is absolutely lifelike. They are produced by Dr. King's patented method, which makes each tooth translucent; that is, the light acts upon them as it acts upon the natural teeth. The ordinary artificial teeth are opaque; that is why, when the light strikes them in the open mouth, they look unnatural and false. Don't buy old style teeth. See Dr. King before having any dental work done, and get the latest and best for the least money and without any pain.



Dr. Thomas Jefferson King, Premier Painless Dentist, originator of the King safe system of painless dentistry, which makes all dental operations painless, and inventor of the "Natural Gums," which prevent the detection of artificial teeth in the mouth.

Full set of teeth as low as $5, gold crowns $5, bridge work $5, gold fillings $1 up, other fillings 50c.; painless extraction free when sets are ordered. All work guaranteed.

IT'S DIFFERENT WITH A REALLY TRULY BURGLAR

MISS MARGUERITE KEELER

SHE HAS IDEAS ON GUNS AND BURGLARS.

Marguerite Keeler Says She Can Chase Robber With Revolver Only When She Gets Cue.

"A woman might go for a burglar with a gun in her hand if she had a cue," says Miss Marguerite Keeler.

She doesn't mean a billiard cue.

She means a stage "cue," the words that give the signal for her next lines.

Miss Keeler is one of "Homer Mason, Marguerite Keeler & Co," playing at the Howard Theatre this week in the clever one-act skit, "Hooked by Crook." In her part she has to grasp a revolver and turn suddenly on a burglar, who has so far had things all his own way.

"Do you think, Miss Keeler," she was asked to-day, "that you would have courage in real life to grasp a revolver and turn it on a burglar if you found him in your room?"

"M—m—mmm," hesitated Miss Keeler, "I doubt it. It might be loaded, you know."

"It wouldn't be much use if it wasn't."

"An empty one is good enough for me, on the stage or off."

"Well, supposing a really truly burglar came in your room and you could get hold of a revolver, would you do it?"

"I tell you," she said with a laugh, "you let me hear my cue and I'd probably jump for it then, anyhow, and might scare the burglar. But I'm sure I'd need my cue to start me."

ABOUT THE HUB

Scratching away in a great ash heap outside of the furnace room at the State House can be seen nearly every day seven or eight Italian men and women who are searching for the precious coke. Women rigged out in the gaudy headdress of their native land form the majority of the coke hunters. They bend over the ash heap for hours at a time, and if they are rewarded by filling a potato sack full of coke after a half day's work they are satisfied. Employes at the State House are accustomed to the coke hunters, and admit them through the building to the furnace room at all times. The coke is not sold, but is taken home and used for fuel.

The contrast between the lights and shades of an actress's life are intense. The plight of the former "show girl" charged with murder in New York is only one illustration. Great is the contrast between her lot to-day and that of the bride of a Pittsburg millionaire or the promised bride of an English peer. From the footlights to a palace, or from their glare to the deepest degradation, are the two extremes. The lucky actress who reaches the first steps into the limelight of publicity. Hundreds in the pathetic procession to the other extreme are never heard of until circumstances bring them before the scornful glance of the public that in their heyday showered admiration upon them.

This was the case recently when a forsaken looking creature was arraigned in the Municipal Court charged with drunkenness. Nobody would have recognized in her an actress that scarcely more than five years ago was as great a footlight favorite as Evelyn Nesbit, Frances Belmont or any of the other actresses who have been wooed and won by scions of wealth and nobility.

For the sake of an aged mother, respectable brothers and sisters, the newspapers did not tell the pathetic story of the life of this woman who endeavored to toss her head defiantly and answered "Claire Sartoris," when the clerk asked her name.

The story of her life would repeat that of many other young women who have entered the theatrical world, confident and hopeful, to emerge physical and moral wrecks. From a pretty salesgirl in a well-known Boston dry goods establishment, through the philanthropy of the proprietor, she became a student in a conservatory of music. Her entrance into the professional field at the old Bijou Theatre was a night to be remembered by all who heard her sing. About five years ago she was a headliner at Keith's. Drink and an unhappy marriage were her undoing, and what promised to be a bright career has ended in the House of the Good Shepherd, to which she has been committed.

New Yorkers in their hurried and intentionally brief visits to Boston—how they do pity us!—remark upon the stillness of Boston Harbor even during its busiest hours. Tug boats move up and down quietly, only tooting their whistles when it is absolutely necessary. Liners enter and leave their slips silently. Police and fire boats glide about like ordinary pleasure launches, while coasting steamers almost sneak into the harbor as if they were afraid of being noticed. How different is New York Harbor with its constantly tooting, snorting bell-ringing vessels of all kinds and conditions, tearing up and down as frenzied as their fellowmen in Wall street. Come to think of it, the stillness of Boston Harbor during a really busy hour is typical of quietly effective Boston as contrasted with the noisy, puffing, blowing suburb of Jersey City.

* * *

In the Superior Criminal Court the other day a well-known young fellow from East Boston was called to the stand to testify. Being a witness for the Government, he was first examined by the District Attorney and then turned over to the counsel for the defendant. In the course of his cross-examination he was asked his nationality, when he innocently replied that he was a Protestant.

* * *

A young professional man in one of Boston's suburbs recently joined a fraternal society and was invited to be a member of the staff of the district deputy on a visit to Canton. He accepted, but on arriving there was somewhat mortified to see the rest of the suite donning white gloves, while as this was his first experience he was unprovided with them. Inquiry showed that the Canton stores were closed, and not an extra pair was to be had. But the Boston man's self reliance was equal to the occasion. Hunting up the local undertaker, he rang the night bell, bought a pair of the white cotton gloves sometimes used at funerals and appeared triumphantly with the rest of the staff.

The usual crop of fish stories that come up from Maine at this time of year create a longing for the Pine Tree State in the breast of at least one resident of Massachusetts. He is Dr. William P. PAUL JONES'S COMMISSION

WASHINGTON, June 2.—Secretary of the Navy Morton received information today that the original commission of John Paul Jones as a captain in the navy has been found in Philadelphia, and he will make an effort to obtain it for the Navy Department. The commission, a copy of which was sent here, reads:

> John Paul Jones is appointed to be captain in the navy. By order of Congress.
>
> JOHN HANCOCK, President.
> Philadelphia, October 10, 1779.
> Attest—CHARLES THOMSON.

According to the Secretary's informant, the commission has every appearance of being genuine. It is now in possession of a prominent woman of Philadelphia, who received it from her mother, into whose possession it had come from her father, Commodore Guiet Gansevoort, U. S. N., who had received it from his father, General Peter Gansevoort, of Revolutionary fame.

If the document can be purchased from its present owner it will be carefully preserved and placed on exhibition in the Navy Department library.

DIPHTHERIA IN QUINCY.

QUINCY, June 2.—Fearing an epidemic of diphtheria among the pupils of the Adams Grammar School on Phipps street, the Board of Health has closed that school for one week for the purpose of fumigation.

OPERATION AVOIDED

EXPERIENCE OF MISS MERKLEY

She Was Told That an Operation Was Inevitable, How She Escaped It

When a physician tells a woman suffering with ovarian or womb trouble that an operation is necessary, the very thought of the knife and the operating table strikes terror to her heart, and our hospitals are full of women coming for ovarian or womb operations.

Miss Margret Merkley

There are cases where an operation is the only resource, but when one considers the great number of cases of ovarian and womb trouble cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after physicians have advised operations, no woman should submit to one without first trying the Vegetable Compound and writing Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for advice, which is free.

Miss Margret Merkley of 275 Third Street, Milwaukee, Wis., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Loss of strength, extreme nervousness shooting pains through the pelvic organs, bearing down pains and cramps compelled me to seek medical advice. The doctor, after making an examination, said I had ovarian trouble and ulceration and advised an operation. To this I strongly objected and decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The ulceration quickly healed, all the bad symptoms disappeared and I am once more strong, vigorous and well."

Ovarian and womb troubles are steadily on the increase among women. If the monthly periods are very painful, or too frequent and excessive—if you have pain or swelling low down in the left side, bearing down pains, leucorrhœa, don't neglect yourself: try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

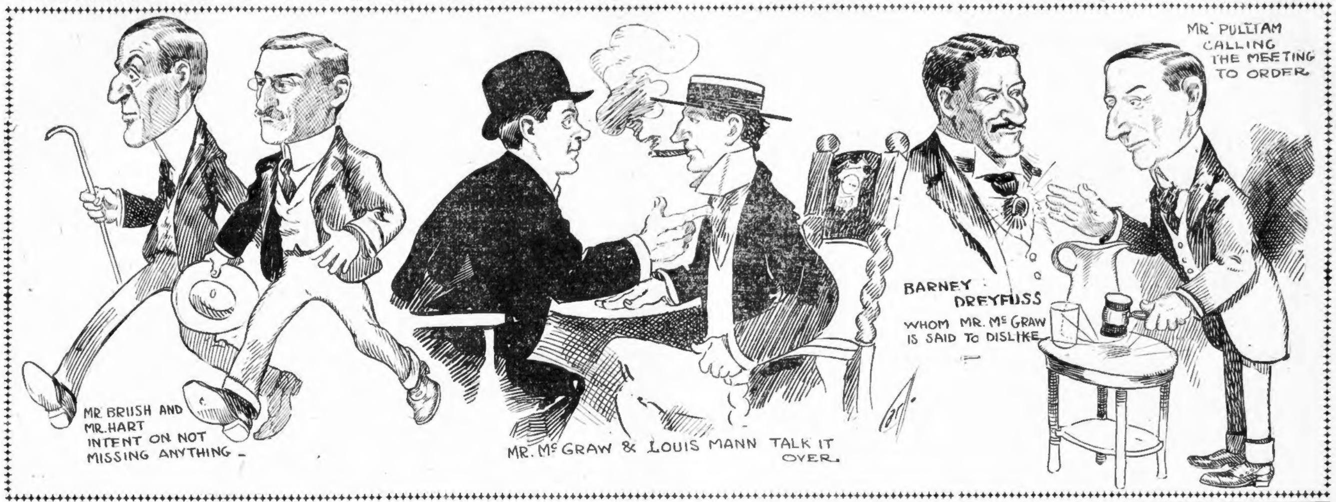
CARTOONIST CARLL SKETCHES SOME INCIDENTS OF THE McGRAW-DREYFUSS BASEBALL HEARING



MR. BRUSH AND MR. HART INTENT ON NOT MISSING ANYTHING
MR. McGRAW & LOUIS MANN TALK IT OVER
BARNEY DREYFUSS WHOM MR. McGRAW IS SAID TO DISLIKE
MR. PULLIAM CALLING THE MEETING TO ORDER

BRUSH SAYS UMPIRES HAVE TOO MUCH POWER

It is likely that a special meeting of the National Baseball League will be called shortly to revise the rules, which allow the President to suspend and fine a player without obvious reason and take away from the umpires some of their authority of putting players out of the game on charges not subject to penalties according to the rules.

For instance, Sam Mertes, the crack left-fielder of the Giants was ejected from the game against the Boston team yesterday by Umpire Hank O'Day, because he threw down his bat with vehemence.

"I didn't throw down the bat because I was angry because Hank called the last ball a strike," said Mertes to-day. I couldn't have, it cut the plate and fooled me nicely. I did toss the bat away because I was sore on myself because I didn't hit the ball. It was then that O'Day waved me out of the game.

Asked to See Rules.

" went down to the pitcher's box and expostulated with O'Day. I asked him to quote the rule about throwing bats away. He would not. I asked him if there were such a rule, and how long it was in operation. He recommended me to see the men who made the rules.

"I am out ten dollars just because I threw down a bat. I can assure you that I did this because I was chagrined over not hitting the ball, and that was all. It wouldn't have been any different had I pitched my hat into the air if I had made a home-run. This fining of ball players has got to stop in the League or we will be throwing up our hands."

It is cases such as this that has all the players on the New York club, and all the other teams in the league, worried. They don't want to be paying big money out of their salaries just because someone higher up has the authority vested in him to levy all sorts of penalties.

Louis Mann, the actor, appealed to President Pulliam at the Hotel Touraine this morning at 10 o'clock in behalf of McGraw, and asked to have the latter's suspension revoked. Mann is the fan who circulated a petition among the fans and got 12,000 signatures.

After McGraw was exonerated last night and returned to the Copley Square Hotel he was accorded a reception by the players that is unique in baseball annals. His men greeted him with cordial handshaking and pats on the back wit ha real fraternal spirit.

McGraw's Reception.

McGraw was deeply affected by the scene and says that never in his career on the diamond had he received such a demonstration. He said that umpires and fans throughout the country were down on him more because of his past reputation than his actions at present.

He said he was doing his best to give the New York public the best ball team in the country, and it was really discouraging to be branded a "rowdy ball player" when such a thing was untrue.

McGra whad tears in his eyes when he was speaking, and every man on the team vowed he would stick by "Mac" through thick and thin, and that his joys and tribulations were equally their own.

After this the men repaired to one of the dining rooms, and a spread was tendered McGraw which must have warmed the cockles of his heart.

President John T. Brush of the New York National club is rankled by the fining of his men, and it is said that he will appeal to more supreme authorities if he doesn't get satisfaction. He says McGraw was fined and suspended on the complaint of Barney Dreyfuss, whose charges were discredited yesterday before the board of directors at the Touraine. He says if Dreyfuss erred in his charges he also was wrong in the protest he made against McGraw on May 19, and which was responsible for the suspension and fine of McGraw.

To this end Brush gave out the following statement to the BOSTON AMERICAN this morning:

BY JOHN T. BRUSH.

I am opposed to the high-handed hold-up of baseball players that is in vogue nowadays. Take the case of McGraw for an example. I don't say this because he belongs to our club, but he is the present shining mark of the injustice to which players are subject.

McGraw was triumphantly exonerated yesterday of the charges preferred against him by Dreyfuss. Still his discredited accuser on another unfounded charge succeeds in having McGraw mulcted to the extent of nearly $900 and we are outrageously deprived of his valuable services for fifteen days.

The charge against McGraw, whatever it is, is not known. McGraw does not know whether he is charged with killing a Chinaman, stealing a mule or something else equally absurd. All he knows is that he is compelled to stand and deliver $900 because Dreyfuss made complaint against him.

It is palpably unfair, because McGraw is given no opportunity to make a defence. Such a case would disgrace a court of record and is a piece of barbarism. Legislation should be enacted in order to at least give a player some justice.

CASTLE TO FACE DARTMOUTH NINE

BASEBALL:

The Harvard varsity baseball squad will leave Cambridge to-day at noon for Hanover to play Dartmouth Saturday. The team will stop in Concord, N. H., to-night, going on to Hanover to-morrow. Castle will do the twirling against the Hanoverians.

The following men will compose the Crimson squad: Randall, Leonard, Matthews, Stephenson, Dexter, Greenough, Kernan, McCarty, Coburn, Schoenfuss, Tweed, Stone, Field, Spencer, Bradbury, Kemble, Kendricks Henneberry, Castle, Thornton and Kelly.

TRACK:

E. J. Dives, '06, was yesterday elected captain of the Harvard track team to succeed W. A. Schick, the famous Crimson sprinter, who graduates this month. Dives's election was expected, as he was easily the most prominent 1906 man on the track team. He has won points for Harvard in the dual games for the past three years, and the intercollegiate for two years. Last year he won the quarter-mile race in the international games at London after the race of the day. The new Harvard track captain comes from Reading, Pa.

WOULD MEET BEST BOYS

Mike Twin Sullivan does not intend letting Battling Nelson rest in the East till the Dane consents to meet him in some kind of a battle.

Twin now wants to make a present of $100 to the Dane if he will give him a chance to meet him at the Chelsea club before he goes back to California.

Sullivan further says that if Nelson insists on sidestepping him at 133 pounds he will take on Honey Mellody or Buddy Ryan at 142 pounds ringside, and they both claim to be welterweight champions. Brother Jack is ready to meet Marvin Hart and bet $1,000 on the side that Hart cannot stop him in twenty rounds.

RECORD GAME AT SPRINGFIELD

SPRINGFIELD, June 2.—J—Springfield and Hartford broke all Connecticut League and Hampden Park records by playing nineteen innings, with the final score 2 to 1 for Springfield. It was a pitchers' battle, with first honors for Luby, who gave four passes and was hit for three singles and a double. Springfield got thirteen scattered hits off Parkins, two of them doubles. In the nineteenth Crook opened with a two-bagger. O'Connor sacrificed and Nagel ended the game with a hit across second.

Al Orth Will Work for the Highlanders, While

TANNEHILL WILL PITCH FOR BOSTON

BY A. H. C. MITCHELL,

Staff correspondent of the BOSTON AMERICAN with the Champion American League team.

NEW YORK, June 2.—With Tannehill in the box this afternoon the Champs will start all over again, putting yesterday's game down to a horrible nightmare. There are some things 'twere better not to dwell on.

Smiling Al Orth will doubtless be selected by Griffith to go against the Bostons, but should the Champs bunch a hit or two Colonel Orth will be chased to the bench, for that is the way Griffith does things. So when it is announced that Orth will pitch one must remember there is a good-sized string attached to the statement.

For a team that is in last place (the Boston held that proud position up to last Sunday) Griffith's men put up a surprising game of ball. It looked as though they were taking a desperate chance. They got away with it in such a way as to make the Champs look mighty small.

Field in Bad Shape.

The field was in bad condition and the Boston men slipped and slid around as though they had no spikes on their shoes. They went along all right until the New York fellows filled the bases on bunts, none of which was properly handled in the third inning.

This disconcerted Dinneen, and for the next five innings the crash of the bat against his benders was loud in the land. In all the New Yorks sent six men across the plate in the third inning on seven hits, including a two-bagger.

Gilbson came in to relieve Big Bill after the damage had been done, and in the remaining five innings Griffiths men touched him up for nine hits. Altogether the loca's made enough safe swats to last them a month.

Champs Did Some Batting.

The Champs did some batting, too, but it was of the forlorn hope variety—that is, which followed New York's great rally were of that kind. Boston made ten hits for a total of nineteen, but New York went away beyond that with eighteen hits for a total of thirty. It was really too much of a good thing. There were big casino hits, little casino hits, high hits, low hits and jack and the game hits. It was a bad day for Boston and that's enough said.

NOTES OF THE PLAYERS.

Chesbro went to bat in the fifth, but after having one ball and one strike called on him, Griffith chased him away and called in Elberfeld, who struck out.

Chase runs clear up to the plate on an attempted bunt, leaving Williams on the pitcher to cover first base.

Griffith announced that he was going to lay off Dougherty and play Conroy in left field, but he changed his mind.

'Twas a small crowd and the game seemed dull until the New Yorks began swatting the ball.

Two Boston runners were caught at the plate on close plays.

Collins slipped on nearly every bunt that came his way.

GIANTS MAY HAVE TO CONTEND WITH 'YOUNG CY' TODAY

Not the least disheartened at getting the losing end of the first game with the Giants, the Tenneyites will give them a harder battle to-day in the second encounter and try to make amends for the miscue of yesterday.

That was only one out of the series of five that are to come off before the two teams cease hostilities, and there is yet a chance of making a presentable record.

The Giants are travelling at a terrific gait, and are hard for any team to shake down. There is always hope in the home camp that the locals will show a bit of high-class form and take the New Yorkers unawares, as it has been done before and there is always a chance of it happening again.

The visitors have the greatest respect for our star twirler, "Cy" Young, and when he goes in the box they know that it is constant vigilance on their part to keep in the running.

It's worth the price of admission to watch the scrappy Giants in action, and the band keeps pretty well together, making it a hot competition among them to see who can shine the brightest in making the biggest stunts.

They want to get a good lead on the Pirate gang, now that the strife between the rivals has become so bitter, and are out for the wins with more vigor than ever.

Leon Ames may be seen passing up the twisters to-day, and he is doing grand work this season. He only broke into big company a couple of years ago, coming from the New York State League, and this year he seems to have struck his gait. Very few defeats have been registered against him since the campaign opened, and he is doing as well as McGinnity or Mathewson.

Perhaps Tenney will turn Young loose, and he will make it intensely interesting for the McGrawites before the session is ended.

HARD TO PICK WINNER OF HANLON-"CORBETT" BOUT

BY TAD.

Eddie Hanlon and "Young Corbett" will meet for the third time in San Francisco to-night. Their first battle, which was for twenty rounds, went the limit to a draw, but on their second meeting "Corbett" beat Hanlon to a standstill in sixteen. I saw both these battles, and for slugging they were never equalled.

When Hanlon met the Denver lad the first time the latter had just landed the title from McGovern, and was all swelled up from glory. He trained very little for the 'Frisco boy, and was given a hard beating, which almost proved his undoing. Eddie fought him all over the ring for seventeen rounds, and in the eighteenth toppled him over on the floor with a right on the body. At the count of six Corbett rolled over on his back, and we all got the coats ready to go home, thinking it all over. The cheering was deafening and the referee counted eight before the Denver man made an attempt to arise. He grabbed the lower rope, and just as the tenth was coming forth he got on his feet and held Hanlon as best he could until the joyous ding dong rang out.

The second time they met it was a bit different. "Corbett" was in cherry-ripe shape. He was trained as fine as he had ever been, and the way he laced Hanlon was a caution. He used different tactics this time, and put his head on Eddie's chest, showering overhand rights and lefts until the little 'Frisco boy fell on the ropes exhausted. He could do nothing with the Denverite that night, and the fight was stoped in the sixteenth round with Hanlon unable to hold his hands up. Hanlon had never been knocked off his feet before the second go, but "Corbett" did the trick two or three times that night and gave Hanlon the hardest fight he ever had barring none.

This fight is a hard one to pick, as both "Corbett" and Hanlon have met defeat twice since their other famous fights, and no one seems to know just how they line up.

Jimmy Britt calls "Corbett" a dub and says that Hanlon will stick him full of holes, when they meet. Terry McGovern told me the other day at Belmont Park that "Corbett" was all in. "Hanlon will kill him," said the Terrible One, "now you watch and see if I'm not right. Hanlon took care of himself, while this fellow 'Corbett' hit the booze."

Battling Nelson is a great "Corbett" man. He says the Denverite will come in on the bit. "Hanlon can't punch," says the Dane. "'Corbett' is too strong for him, and when he lands two or three rights Eddie will fall surely. I beat them both, and even though Hanlon did stay longer I always thought 'Corbett' the better man. He broke one of my ribs, you know, and a fellow has to punch to do that. No, Hanlon can't hurt him. It might be a stubborn fight, but I think the Denver boy will breeze in."

Notes of the Harness Horses

Secretary Hitchings of Old Saugus has announced the classes for the meeting on the marsh, June 27 to 30, as follows: Trotting, free-for-all, 2:15, 2:17, 2:20, 2:25 and 2:30 classes; pacing, free-for-all, 2:10, 2:13, 2:16, 2:19, 2:22 and 2:25 classes.

* * *

May King at $625 was a cheap horse. A statement made at the sale was this: "He has had eighteen mares booked to him this season, which at his advertised fee would return $900. He has substance for eighteen more this year."

* * *

The big horse sale at Readville brought out a good lot of buyers, and, as one man put it, there was a fitting lot of purchasers for every class of horse offered.

* * *

Frank R. Hayden, who was instrumental in unloading a breeding plant on the Lookout Farm, made good by purchasing twelve head of the Lookout consignments.

* * *

The Boston horse auction is likely to move to Somerville at an early day.

* * *

At Moulton is still head trainer for General Paine at Weston.

The Outlook, son of Bingen and Young Miss, went back to the Lookout Farm.

Eddie Hanlon and "Young Corbett" will meet for the third time in the ring at San Francisco to-night., The BOSTON AMERICAN'S "Afternoon Edition" will contain the best and most complete account of the bout. A full description of each round will be received from 'Frisco over the BOSTON AMERICAN'S longest leased wire in the world, and, as it will be written by experts in ring matters, everyone interested in boxing should be sure to get a copy of to-morrow's "Afternoon Edition" of the BOSTON AMERICAN.

DOUGLAS CLUB CHANGES BOUT

The match between Kid Goodman and Adam Ryan of Chicago, which was scheduled at the Douglas A. C. for next Wednesday, has been cancelled, as Goodman has sprained his ankle and cannot meet Ryan yet awhile.

The club may match up Joe Grim and Sam Langford for the date, and it will be the first appearance of the Human Punching Bag here.

WALSH MAY MEET FORBES

There is a possibility of Jimmy Walsh and Harry Forbes being matched up for June 17 at the Chelsea Club and this pair of topnotchers in the bantam class would make one of the finest contests ever seen on the boards.

Both are past masters of ring tactics and it would be a fine test of science, with but little choice for a winner.

They will weigh in at 118 pounds at 6 o'clock if they are matched.

EXETER SHOULD WIN THE MEET

The annual track and field games of the New England Interscholastic A. A., under the auspices of the Harvard A. A., will be held on Soldiers Field to-morrow afternoon.

Exeter and Worcester Academy have the largest teams entered and the meet lies between these two schools. Of these two schools Exeter has the better all-around team, Worcester relying much on the work of its captain, J. W. Mayhew, who is entered in six events.

JACK "TWIN" BEAT BURLEY

Word has been received in this city that Jack "Twin" Sullivan beat Nick Burley May 24 at Dawson City in a whirlwind fight. The bout was held before the largest crowd that ever witnessed one in that section of the country. The Dawson City A. C., who ran the fight, are now said to be trying to arrange a match between Sullivan and Kid McCoy for July 4.

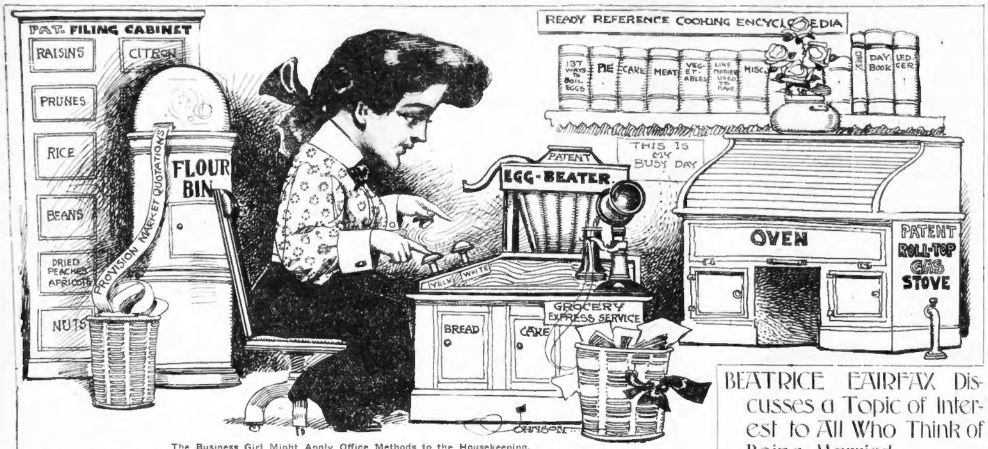
WHICH WILL MAKE THE BETTER HELPMATE? THE BUSINESS GIRL OR THE GIRL TRAINED AT HOME.



The Business Girl Might Apply Office Methods to the Housekeeping.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX Discusses a Topic of Interest to All Who Think of Being Married

HOW about the business girl as a wife and home-maker?

It has been claimed that her business duties fill her life to such an extent that she has no time to cultivate the domestic accomplishments.

This may be true to a certain extent, as the demands of business are imperative and cannot be neglected.

Moreover, she is under salary, and her time is not her own, but her employer's.

At the same time there is no reason on earth why she should not make the best of wives, mothers and housekeepers.

Her business training teaches her to be methodical, neat and punctual, three very necessary qualifications in a good housekeeper.

She is always on the alert; her intelligence is constantly stimulated.

There is not the slightest reason why her business life should interfere with her womanliness, for the girl who is modest and womanly will hold these qualities, no matter what her environment may be.

She can be of the greatest assistance to her husband in many ways, as her business training has taught her to reason as a man.

The intricacies of checks, drafts, debts and credits will never have to be explained to her.

The grocery and milk bills will have no terrors for her, as she will have a system with all her expenditures that will keep her out of hot water.

When she first marries she may be very ignorant regarding cooking, but surely the intelligence that unravels a tangled balance sheet can wrestle with a boiled potato and even finally reach the heights of pumpkin pie.

The business girl is, as a rule, content to settle down into the most domestic of women. She has had her experience of independence, has had to look after herself so long that it is very comforting to know there is some one who will care for her and stand between her and the world.

She may, perhaps, grow a trifle self-opinionated and dictatorial, but these are surface faults which a little loving correction and firm handling will soon remedy.

She will be ambitious for her husband's success and spur him on in many ways.

She has seen enough of the world to understand the keenness of competition and to realize that if she wishes him to succeed she must keep him well nourished and comfortable in his home life.

The half-fed man cannot put his best energies into anything.

The business girl makes an economical wife because, having earned money herself, she knows the value of it.

The motherly side of her nature may be undeveloped, but in every good woman it lies dormant, ready to spring to life at the first touch of a tiny hand, and the business girl may make quite as wise a mother as the domestic girl.

Many men prefer the clinging, dependent girl to the self-reliant, independent one. But the one is quite as capable of deep, lasting love as the other, and though she may not look up to a man with as much admiration as her domestic sister, the business girl asks nothing more than to tread the path of life side by side with her husband in loving, mutual understanding.

A woman can have no greater career than that of wife and mother, and it is the natural ambition of every girl, be she business-like or domestic, to be a good wife.

What do you consider the necessary qualities to make a good wife?

What It Is Makes a Child Well Born

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

AN absolutely legitimate child in the eyes of heaven and earth to-day requires the collaboration of God and law.

The generally accepted idea of a legitimate child is one born in wedlock. According to the usage of words it does suffice to legitimize a child when a marriage ceremony has taken place between the father and the mother.

But in the higher court of nature something more is required. That something is love between the parents, especially love in the mother's heart for the father of her child.

That is the only excuse for conception.

The mother who carries through the long prenatal months a child of a man she does not love, and whose caresses are hateful to her, sins against the Holy Ghost, and bears an illegitimate child, no matter if all the clergymen and priests and all the law-makers of the land have pronounced them husband and wife.

Abnormal, diseased, idiotic, insane and half-developed children are frequently found born in wedlock; they are rarely found born out of wedlock.

This is explainable through the fact that women frequently marry for other causes than love. Ambition, indolence and avarice lead more brides to the altar in modern society than love. They are not actuated by the wifely or the maternal impulses.

They are not even stirred by nature's sex impulse—that impulse which brings so few imperfect animals, insects, birds and plants into existence.

They simply endure wifehood and motherhood as the price they pay for the pride and privilege of occupying the social and financial position coveted.

The children of such women are legally legitimate—morally illegitimate.

The child of the woman who forgot self-protection and self-respect in her mad love for some man and abandoned herself to him is legally illegitimate, but in nature's court is legitimized by the divine seal of love.

Nevertheless, until the human race reaches a higher state of development, the law cannot place its children so born on the same footing with those born in wedlock without jeopardizing the interests of society.

Unless society could know that no woman would fall from her high estate of chastity, save through an overwhelming love, it would be disastrous to the good and loving wives and willing mothers to place no legal barrier between the children born in and out of wedlock.

Such a precedent would invite lawlessness and encourage license.

The child born out of wedlock must suffer the ban of the law, but it is often repaid by a dower of qualities which render it physically, mentally and morally a superior type of humanity.

The child of married parents, however loveless the union, must be allowed the sanction of society and the courts, but it suffers through a long life with an incomplete and unfortunate inheritance, because its conception violated God's primal law.

And so, after all, the balance of eternal justice is maintained in this, as in many other matters, which on the surface seem unfair and unjust to the casual observer.

SCARLET LIES ❧

By X and Z, Authors of Married to Mystery

CHAPTER XCI.—Continued.

HE had never heard the name before. The letter bore every sign of being genuine, and yet he could not get the thought of that red-haired, freckled-face man who had followed him a few minutes ago out of his mind.

One thing was quite certain, however—he could not run any risk. Of course, he could not see this Mr. Balshaw. What would be the good?

The man would be back again at 1 o'clock. Before then he must leave the Hotel Dominique. He lost no time in packing up his scanty luggage. Then he rang the bell and asked for his bill, which he paid, and requested that his luggage might be put on a cab immediately.

In the vestibule he spoke to the hall porter again.

"Tell the gentleman when he calls," he said, "that I have been unexpectedly called away, and may not be back for several days. Keep all letters for me, and take this for yourself."

He gave the man his second tip that morning.

"To the Gare St. Lazare," he said to the cocher, and they drove off. His intention was to leave his luggage there until he had made other arrangements.

He was quite prepared for any eventuality, and quite expected that he was being followed. But he had to risk that. He kept his eyes open, and he was not altogether surprised, though considerably alarmed, when he saw a plainly dressed, ordinary looking man on the opposite side of the Rue St. Marc, eyeing him curiously, and, as he drove off, jump into a passing voiture and follow him.

There could be no mistaking the man's intention. He appeared to make no secret of it.

Stephen sat well back in his closed cab, thinking hard. How was he to throw these people off his scent? That was the question. At all costs, at any risk, he must do it. But how?

He peered cautiously out of the tiny window at the back of the cab. The man was still following. He was lounging carelessly back, smoking a cigar, but his eyes were never for a second off Stephen's closed cab.

The man looked thoroughly French. He might well be a clerk, or a salesman in some shop. He had a shrewd face, but not the face of a detective. His upper lip was adorned by an obviously natural fair moustache, with neatly waved ends.

"Something will have to happen at the railway station," said Stephen to himself. "If I only knew who the fellows were and what they are up to!"

And, as if in answer to his wish, he saw the man in the open fly behind recognize a man walking on the pavement. It was at the corner of the Rue Taitbout and the Boulevard Haussmann. The little Frenchman sprang to his feet and spoke to the cocher. The man drew up by the curb for an instant, and the man on the pavement leapt in and sat beside the Frenchman.

Stephen saw the whole manoeuvre, which was executed in a few seconds. The cocher evidently knew what was expected of him. He whipped up his bony steed, and was soon back again in his place, immediately behind Stephen's cab.

Then it was that Stephen recognized the second man, and his heart gave a great bound, and then seemed to stop beating altogether.

The man was detective Gerrard of Mulberry street.

CHAPTER XCII.

Gerrard at Work.

THE ignominious failure of the police to capture or trace the mysterious man in the gray check suit got very seriously upon Gerrard's mind. The Mapelia police had let the man slip easily through their fingers at Mapelia railway station. If he had had his way he would have peremtorily dismissed Roberts and Bull and Peacock and several others from the force.

Up to a certain point, Gerrard was very satisfied with his own achievement, although it only confused him. Without a doubt, by the aid of his marvelous dog, he had traced the murderer of the so-called Stephen Holland from the scene of the crime, by more or less direct route, to the outskirts of the old city, to where the car lines started.

From that point the evidence of Venus, the bloodhound, ceased. Obviously the man took a car from that point; but at that point the evidence as far as Gerrard was concerned ceased.

What the man had done between that point and where he was practically arrested on the platform of Mapelia railway station, Gerrard troubled himself little about.

The young constable Roberts had seen the man, spoken to him, and, fool that he was, let him leave by the 11:52 express for Boston.

Roberts, in a way, fool and clumsy novice though he was, was an invaluable witness, because he had actually seen and spoken to the man, and was able materially to elaborate the very scanty description supplied by Kalkin.

Moreover, a definite point had been reached. The man was in a smoking car in the middle of the train, which would assuredly stop at Port Cleno at 2:15 a. m.

Gerrard spent an hour telephoning and telegraphing instructions and descriptions to the police and railway officials at Port Cleno. And then he sat down and waited, trying hard to hide the acute and nervous anxiety which possessed him.

It was not till half-past two that morning that he received the first intimation of the fiasco of Port Cleno. The man had stopped the train and escaped. It was perfectly plain to him, though by no means so plain to the officials.

That marked the End of the Trail.

From that moment, although everything that could be done by the police was done, though the country was literally scoured, railway stations and ports and boats were watched, the man who, according to Policeman Roberts, had called himself Smith, and who spoke with a strong English accent, who was attired in a striking suit of clothes, disappeared as if by magic into the air.

Gerrard was baffled and enraged, but none the less determined to persevere and leave no stone unturned to hunt the man down. It was a hopeless task, and he fully realized it—none more than he.

He went to Port Cleno by the earliest available train, and worked like a Trojan; but to no purpose. He visited the exact spot where the train had been stopped, and carefully examined the immediate neighborhood for any clue, but in vain. At first he thought that the man must be hiding in the district—that, having received warning that he was being followed, he would lie low for a time. Obviously he was a clever hand, for he must have known that arrest awaited him had he gone on to Port Cleno. Therefore he had stopped the train. It was a clever ruse. Gerrard admired the man's daring, though he would have sold his soul to have had him safely under lock and key.

It was not until the end of that day, when, as a matter of fact, the man he was looking for in the neighborhood of Port Cleno was safely on his way to Paris, that Gerrard, who was dog-tired, dejectedly gave up his quest and went to bed.

He was up early the next morning. He was wasting time in Port Cleno. He must get up to Boston without delay. There were facilities there. Here he was out of touch with everything.

It was at the Port Cleno railway station that, quite by accident, he got hold of what at the time seemed a very flimsy clew, but which soon proved to be the foundation of an elaborate fabric of indisputable evidence, and enabled Gerrard to carry out one of the most brilliant pieces of detective work in his or perhaps any other man's record.

The clue came from the ticket agent from whom he bought his ticket.

The ticket was promptly produced with the correct change, and Gerrard was about to move away when the mood came to him to chaff the ticket agent.

"Do you take any notice of people who buy tickets, young man?"

"Can't say I do," retorted the agent. "Got too much to do."

"You wouldn't know me again, I suppose—er?"

The agent bent down and looked up at the speaker.

"Humph! I might," he answered. "It all depends."

"You miss a great chance," said Gerrard. "You fellows might help the police a lot if you only took the trouble to keep your eyes and ears and wits about you."

"Thanks," said the agent crossly. "I've got quite enough to do as it is without troubling about passengers. This isn't child's play, you know. But what are you getting at—eh, sir?"

Gerrard smiled faintly.

"I was only just wondering," he said, "whether you'd noticed a man in a gray check suit, with an English accent, buying tickets of you lately."

"Oh, I see your game!" laughed the agent. "You're talking about the Holland murder."

"I am, young man; and I thought it just possible, don't you know, that the fellow who so cleverly escaped from the train yesterday morning might have continued his journey. He's a pretty plucky chap, with plenty of nerve, whoever he is."

"Well, he isn't likely to come and run his neck into the noose here is he? The station's simply swarming with police. I've had a fly cop in here with me all day."

"That's good!" said Gerrard.

"As a matter of fact," said the ticket agent, "I was on night duty that night. I was here when the 2:15 came in. It's due to leave at 2:20. It was a bit late."

"When did you go off duty?"

"At six."

SOMETHING NO WOMAN SHOULD MISS.

The Bridal Number of the BOSTON AMERICAN will be published next Sunday. It will be the most interesting compilation of current weddings news which has been read in Boston. It will tell of the weddings this month of ten wealthy Boston women.

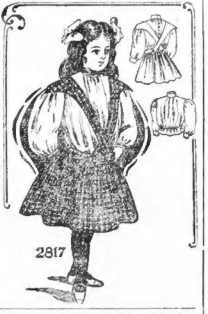
Each and all of these June brides will have wonderful trousseaus. The costliest lace and the daintiest of clinging garments have been devised by the most skillful of modistes. Some of these fortunate young women will have marvellous creations for bridal gowns—and the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN will tell all about them much more graphically than any fashion plate.

The frontispiece of the magazine section will be a pictorial representation of the million dollar bridal gown of pearls made for the Sultan of Turkey's daughter. Its materials are so costly that the modistes worked under the ever watchful eyes of a guard of soldiers. One pearl would have made a seamstress opulent.

Besides telling of the Boston brides, there will be pictures of famous beauties in the South, East, West and Middle States who are to become wives this month. Another feature will be the story of a Royal maiden who is described as the luckiest, but yet unluckiest, bride of the year. A great complexion expert will tell how to beautify a bride. The wedding etiquette of the most fashionable folk will be described, and one feature of more than passing interest is what Mrs. Osborn has to say about the prevailing styles in bridal garments.

Hearst's Boston American Pattern

A Suspender Frock for a Small Girl



No. 2,817—Was there ever anything quite so fine in all the world to a little girl as her older sister's clothes? She would love dearly to dress up in them if she but dared—and what a happiness it would be to have some just like them. Here is a chance for the small lass to have a suspender costume quite as fine and fashionable as her sister's. Made of a simple Scotch mixture or serge and worn with a waist of the same or a dainty lingerie one, it will render Miss Simplicity quite as much a cause of envy as her sister. In the medium size this small gown requires 3½ yards of 36-inch material.

Pattern No. 2,817, five sizes, from 4 to 12 years.

Send 10 cents to obtain this pattern, postpaid, and the size, name and address to HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN PATTERN DEPT., P. O. Box 250, Boston, Mass.

WANT HARDER TREATMENT FOR MED FACS

Harvard Men Are Dissatisfied with "Agreement" in Society's Trouble.

CONFERENCE IS ON TO-DAY

More drastic measures for suppressing the Med Fac Society at Harvard University than the agreement proposed by Dean Byron Satterlee Hurlburt, are being demanded by the undergraduates. While the attitude of Dean Hurlburt has met with commendation, it is felt that the means he suggests will not accomplish the end sought.

Now that the subject has been taken in hand by the college authorities, as the result of the attempt to steal the Brooks memorial tablet, the undergraduates feel that the society should be obliterated root and branch for all time.

One of the officers of the senior class, who reflects the sentiment of the student body, said to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter to-day:

"It is a fact that the undergraduates are not satisfied with the conditions upon which Dean Hurlburt has settled the Med Fac trouble. As an instance, they feel that the society should be compelled to make restitution of all the University property as an evidence of their good faith and sincerity in their promise to become inactive.

"There will be a conference with Dean Hurlburt to-day at which the whole matter will be gone into, and I am sure a satisfactory arrangement arrived at."

The agreement to grant a full pardon to the members of the Med Fac Society connected with the Brooks memorial incident is deplored in an editorial published in the latest issue of the Harvard Bulletin. A new feature in the affair is raised by the assertion that the offenders were shielded from punishment by their family connections, and it is suggested that the punishment cannot be too severe, so that this prejudice as to "class" favoritism may be removed. The Bulletin says:

"To be frank, there is a feeling in college and in the public mind that these men are allowed to go free more because they are connected with our 'first families' than for any other reason, and that if the crime had been committed by some one who roomed in College house the punishment would have been severe and sure. It is unfortunate that anything should have happened to call to life again the charge that in Harvard College the rich man is treated better than the poor. The Med Fac, in addition to its other misdeeds, is now responsible for the renewal of this prejudice. The punishment for that offence should be as severe as it can be made."

BE A QUEEN AND WEAR A CROWN.

A new feature for the girls, a cut-out mask of a queen, in all her regal splendor, will be introduced in next Sunday's HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN. It is unique and will please the little ones in your household.

LAST SERVICE OVER WILLIAM H. FLANDERS

The funeral service of William H. Flanders will be held this afternoon at the family residence, 97 Bellevue avenue, Melrose. Mr. Flanders was senior member of the firm of Chandler & Co., and the store on Winter street is closed to-day out of respect to his memory.

Mr. Flanders was prominent in Boston business circles and in church work. A large attendance is expected at the funeral. The remains will be cremated at Mt. Auburn Cemetery.

NEWS OF LABOR.

The Carpenters' District Council, at a regular meeting, took action on the matter of the alleged sub-letting of a contract by the J. M. E. Morrill Construction Company on a school house in Dorchester. If the matter is not settled in a satisfactory manner or a favorable reply received, carpenters will be called off other buildings being erected by this firm in this city.

A committee was appointed to draw up rules and regulations regarding the admission of apprentices, with the object of reducing the initiation fee. At present apprentices have to pay the regular fee of journeymen.

By a referendum vote, it was decided not to reduce the regular initiation fee. The firms of R. Siletsky and Company, Nathan Drooker and Kopinsky Brothers, having complied with union conditions, were placed on the fair list.

Steps were taken to endeavor to have none but union men do the work on the Christian Science Church. The Council also adopted measures to stop the practice of men sharpening tools on their own time, an abuse which has become so common that action of some sort is necessary.

MACHINISTS TO ELECT.

Machinists' Lodge No. 264 has called a special meeting for June 22 to elect a business agent and also delegates to the international convention to be held in Faneuil Hall, September 11.

Arrangements have been made for a big firemen's muster and field day, to be held at the Locust street grounds, South Boston, July 29, in connection with the biennial convention in this city in September. The committee includes F. D. Burnes, Thomas F. Buckley, Charles B. Sterling, David L. Mahan, A. W. Sockwell and E. A. Bowman of Boston Lodge No. 264, C. W. Tefft, A. P. Stevens, E. T. Winslow and S. F. Wiffin of Railroad Machinists' Lodge No. 567, Charles Douglas, Alexander Campbell and F. B. Chase of Bunker Hill Lodge No. 634, S. M. Thompson of Hyde Park, George B. Loring of Quincy, James M. Murphy of Norwood, H. W. Churchill of Lynn and E. L. Fiske and John J. Connolly of the State District Council.

RUBBER WORKERS' MEETING.

Under the direction of the American Federation of Labor, a mass meeting of rubber workers of Cambridge will be held to-night at the Cambridge Central Labor Union Hall, No. 622 Massachusetts avenue, for the purpose of thoroughly unionizing the craft.

The speakers will include Secretary-Treasurer Dennis D. Driscoll of the State Branch, A. F. of L., President Peter W. Collins and Secretary Henry Abrahams of the Boston Central Labor Union, Frank K. Foster, Fred J. Kneeland, New England organizer of the Brotherhood of Painters, and others.

LABOR NOTES.

Brookline Carpenters' Union, No. 438, will take action on two of the most important matters that have been brought before it since its organization at next Monday night's meeting at No. 166 Washington street, Brookline.

Officers will be nominated at to-night's meeting of helpers' section of Electrical Workers' Union, No 103.

Market and Commission House Teamsters' Union meets to-night to act on an important scale matter, and also to elect a business agent.

Cigarmakers' Union, No. 97, Executive Board has voted $25 for the striking Chicago teamsters.

Out of the Ocean of Space and Time---Into the Ocean of Water

Two Babies' Quick Trip Through This World and on to Another

The steamship Teutonic arrived at New York from Liverpool the other day.

Two human beings were born on her, died on her—and were dropped over her rail into the ocean for a grave.

The babies that came and went so quickly were twins, a boy and a girl.

The mother lay in a bunk in the steerage when the two tiny babies were shown to her. The cabin passengers thought they should do something appropriate. They named the girl Teutonia, for the ship, and the boy McKinstry, in honor of Captain McKinstry, and they discussed ways and means of doing something more for the mother and her children.

Before the passengers had matured their plans the babies solved the problem. Both died. They were wrapped up in little square pieces of flannel, weighted with shot, and dropped into the sea—while other women in the steerage did what they could to comfort the mother, and learned that there could be no comfort. The cabin passengers discussed the twins and queer destiny through games of shuffleboard, while the mother, in the steerage bunk, persistently cried for her babies.

Now all are landed. The mother in a hospital is waiting to forget, the cabin passengers are scattered all over the land. The little boy and girl, duly weighted with lead, are sinking slowly down to the bottom of the big ocean, escaping the hungry fish, let us hope, to find a soft bed in ooze that the dust of meteors has piled up on the ocean's floor.

Good text here, friends and clergymen, for sermons on life's vanity, brevity and strangeness.

The old English king sat at meat with his barons in a great hall dimly lighted, open at both ends.

A sparrow flew in at one end, out at the other. An old man compared the bird's flight, from darkness into light and back into darkness, to man's short journey through this world.

As the sparrow came and went, these two babies of the ocean came into our big hall of life and went out again. For a few moments they knew their mother and she knew them. There were feeble cries, the strange, touching crying of newborn human beings—always beginning life in sorrow. There was a brief struggle to keep the vital breath that would not stay—that lasts but a moment with all of us. Then the two children went back into the night, or into the brightness? The pathetic, helpless little bodies that the mother yearned for were thrown into the ocean, whence came all life in the beginning.

And soon, in a few moments, every one of us will follow them, going out just as helpless and ignorant as those newborn infants, into the mystery that brought us forth.

How typical of humanity's life is the brief existence of these babies born at sea!

Humanity is born on a ship—the earth—sailing in an ocean of ether. Of the Captain that guides the boat, of His plans and of our destiny, we know as little as those babies knew of the captain that read the burial service for them. We are born on the ocean far from any harbor, and we die on the voyage, knowing neither whence we came, nor whither we are going, nor why the journey must be made.

We feel sorrow for that poor, bereaved mother, sympathy for the helpless babies that could not live to know the love awaiting them in their mother's heart—and we ourselves are only babies, sympathizing with babies.

Do we want to turn to USE the sentiment awakened in our sluggish minds by the unusual death of TWO ill-starred children?

Then let us think of the thousands and tens of thousands that die around us, AND THAT NEED NOT DIE if men were less miserably heartless, if the taxes that we sweat out of the poor were not stolen from the poor whose labor pays them.

Every day ONE THOUSAND CHILDREN DIE NEEDLESSLY IN THIS COUNTRY.

All of these deaths are murders. For the thousand deaths per day do not include those deaths that are unavoidable or due to our insufficient knowledge.

Every day a thousand mothers suffer dreadful pain of body and of soul only to fill one more grave.

These children are murdered because they and their mothers cannot have those things which the earth offers so abundantly. They cannot even have the sunshine and pure air. The mother is worked until she has no good blood to give her baby. And if the baby lives to walk it must walk in the dirt of the city's streets, eat the poisoned, adulterated food that WEALTH sells to poverty, live in the damp, child-killing tenements that wealth builds for the poor.

Sweatshops for the mothers and, if necessary, free pauper graves for their children!

That is all we offer those that live and die around us. So let us not get TOO sentimental or admire too deeply in ourselves the emotions called forth by those infants buried at sea.

They escaped at least the tender kindness that our civilization offers to those that have only helplessness; poor, feeble, little, empty hands to recommend them.

Little Editorials from the People

WANTS FRIENDS OF DUMB ANIMALS TO WAKE UP

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

I noticed in your paper of the 26th a letter from "An Everett Citizen," complaining that the police did not do their duty in regard to a horse which was so sick that it fell at a street corner.

Do you think the police in any city can be relied upon to do their duty as regards cruelty to animals?

Last Summer, in Newton, I tried to have a ribbon removed from a horse's harness which an ignorant driver had tied directly where it would dangle in the eyes, and I was only ridiculed by the police and also by an agent of the S. P. C. A. We cannot expect much from the police when that society is so remiss—a fact I have learned by experience.

Its special agents are quite advanced in years, and have evidently become hardened to animals' sufferings. One of them once met my complaint of a man guilty of twisting an animal's tail with the assurance that it did not injure the animal to twist its tail. And this same agent had been about so little he did not know that cows are carried in carts, even declared that they were never transported in that way—were always driven.

A FRIEND TO DUMB ANIMALS.

Dinkelspiel's Advice to Togo

By George V. Hobart

Copyright, 1905, by American-Journal-Examiner.

To Atmiral Chon Henry Togo, Der Chapanese Crackerchack:

DEAR TOGIE—Please oxcoos me dot I wrote dese few lines, but I haf been through seferal vars mineself und I haf vitnessed how easy it is for a hero to took der wrong road und valk uneggspectantly into der cold storage department of der public's estimationment in der twinkling of a glass eye.

Dot is der reason I vould vish to gif you a few points on der ettyket of being a hero vich I haf studied from opservationment in dis country.

Brafe Togie: Ven you get home in Tokio or Yokelhoma or Communipaw or varefer it is, keep der face closed, more eggspecially in der region of der mouth, because der moment a hero begins to speak somebody vill misconstruction vot he says und get him talking politics ven he only meant to say "Wie gehts, alretty!"

Clefer Togie: Doan'd nefer talk mit a ambitious reporter unless you haf a baseball mask ofer der face und a mosquito netting ofer der vocabulary; because if you only say to him "Guten morgen!" you vill find it in der paper to-morrow a column interfew in vich you haf decisioned to run for Mikado on der Demmykritic tigget.

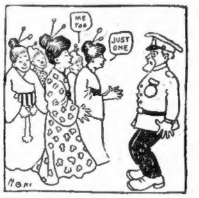
Goot Togie: Ven you arrive at der depot in your home town you vill find lined up in front of der baggage room abould sigsty-sefen young ladies all mit deir lips puckerationed up in der most kissified manner—but doan'd do it, Togie!

Friend Togie: Resist der awful temptationing to go down der line and plant burning kisses on der front teeth of dese beautiful maidens, because after planting dese kisses der harvest vill be der long grass of oblivion, und you vill find yourself rushing madly through der comic papers trying to bite der fair ladies darein.

Smart Togie: Ven you meet dis awful situation, as meet it you vill, sneer chently at der puckerationed lips und repeat ofer und ofer dot olt proferb vich says it, Osculation is der thief of reputation. Den mit a haughty glance at der lady kissing bugs chump quickly into your ginrickeyshaw und gallop sviftly home to der luffing arms of your vife. If der kissing bugettas should follow you to der sacred precincts of der home circle send your mudder-in-law ouid mit der broomstick, und may a kind Heaven help dem dot cannot run fast enough.

Belofed Togie: Now comes it. Dis atvice I gif you from der heart. Doan'd let any committee presentation you mit a house, because der public likes to honor a hero by gifing him somedding eggspensive und den dishonor him afterwards by vatching vot he does mit it.

Noble Togo: Dare vas only two vays a hero can remain a hero in dis strange vorld of our. Vun vay is to die yust after he has heroed, und der udder vay is to get in a glass case und stay dare—but he must buy der glass case himself.



"Sneer chently at der puckerationed lips."

Unbeatable Togie: Ven der public gets a chag of choy from der intogsication of your success dey vill surely rush up to you mit der plans und specifications of a fine bungalow mit hot und cold gas und running servants, but ven dey do so yust place der left hand in der apex of der vestcoat boosum and say to dem mit a cold glitter in der lamps, "I t'ank you, public, for dis cheherosity, but I vould prefer dot you keep der bungalow und I vill keep my own leedle flat on 109th street, because I know der chanitor, und he nefer steals der milk."

Nice Togo: Republics und publics vas ungrateful. Vile der chag of choy lasts dey like to gif a hero more den is cameing to him, but after der chag of choy vares off den comes der bitter morning after, ven dey vake up mit der head full mit third-rail microbes und der tongue like a curry-comb, und dey vill keep saying to demselfs, "Vy dit I gif dot hero such a nice house, because now I forget yust vot kind of heroing he done to deserf it."

Mein lieber Togo: Awoid der kissing bugettas und doan'd pay any attention to der house committee und maybe you vill be able to hero yourself to der bitter end. I haf nefer been a hero mineself, Togie, mit der eggsception of vun afternoon ven I sunk a armored cruiser cook in our kitchen after she had svallowed a bottle of vodka und vas bombarding der gas stove mit our best set of China dishes, but I luff all der heroes, und if any leedle advice of mine could help a hero to keep busy at der chob of heroing I vould be pleased und tickled internally. Yours mit luff,

D. DINKELSPIEL,

The World

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

WITH noiseless step Good goes its way;
The earth shakes under Evil's tread.
We hear the uproar, and 'tis said
The world grows wicked every day.

It is not true. With quiet feet,
In silence, Virtue sows her seeds;
While sin goes shouting out its deeds,
And echoes listen and repeat.

But surely as the old world moves,
And circles round the shining sun,
So surely does God's purpose run,
And all the human race improves.

Despite bold Evil's noise and stir,
Truth's golden harvests ripen fast;
The Present far outshines the Past;
Men's thoughts are higher than they were.

Who runs may read this truth, I say;
Sin travels in a rumbling car,
While Virtue soars on like a star—
The world grows better every day.

No Taxes in This Town

NO wonder that the residents of the Black Forest town of Freudenstadt gave it that name, for they have the advantage of living in the only city in Germany where there are no taxes to pay.

Although the population is only seven thousand, Freudenstadt is a full-fledged city, with a police force of six men, a fire department, a Mayor and Board of Aldermen. The annual budget is about $25,000, but it does not worry the citizens, and they never have to call mass meetings to decide how to raise money to pay the police or keep the streets and sidewalks in good repair.

The reason of this is that the little city is the lucky owner of six thousand acres of fine forest lands. Of course, these lands might have been sold to some lumber company, and there are many who will contend that Freudenstadt could make larger profits from its forests that way than by any other means. But, as a matter of fact, the good burghers are very well satisfied with the present condition of affairs, inasmuch as each and every one of the six thousand acres produces an annual profit of something like five dollars.

The forests are managed after the most approved methods, and no tree is ever cut down until it reaches the most profitable age. Then, for every three that is cut, one, and sometimes two, are planted to take its place.

The United States was once largely covered with forests, but hundreds of thousands of acres have been laid waste by lumbermen, whose only thought was to get as much profit as quickly as possible. Proper forestry precautions would have continued those great resources for all time, but to-day there are only trackless wastes where the big timber has been cut away.

And yet, this little German town, with only six thousand acres, is able to pay all the municipal expenses for a population of seven thousand people, and still have a balance in the treasury, after paying each year's bills, while the United States will very soon be obliged to look to Canada for its supply, not only of lumber, but of the pulpwood from which ordinary "news" paper is made.
